SITUATION IN SOUTH AFRICA

Commercial Prosperity Depends Upon Mining and Mining Flagging for Want of Labor—The Chinese Question—Market for Manufactures and Food Stuffs.

(By Hugh S. Kingdon, Krugersdorp, Transvaal.)

"I have never seen business so bad during the twenty years I have been in South Africa," remarked a Johannesburg merchant the day before I left the Rand. The gold output greater than ever (over $10,000,000 last month) and yet business has never been so bad. What a remarkable state of affairs! And yet the explanation is simple. The prosperity of the whole of South Africa is virtually dependent upon the Rand mines. If Canada could not get the labor to harvest her wheat crop then every individual in the country would feel the effect. How much more must South Africa feel the pinch when she is unable to get a sufficient supply of labor to develop her only great industry. South Africa's exports for the six months ended December 31, 1905, were as follows:

Exports: South African produce—	Value.	Per Cent. proportion of Total.
Gold	54,600,958	61.4
Diamonds	16,944,035	19.1
Other raw materials, mainly unmanufactured	14,659,787	16.4
Animals, (living)	943,723	1.1
Articles of food and drink	113,374	.1
Manufactured articles (not food and drink)	167,389	.2
Total exports (South African produce)	84,429,266	98.3
Goods not South African produce	1,515,674	1.7
Total exports (British South Africa)	88,944,940	100.0

From this you will observe that 61.4 per cent. of the export trade of the whole of British South Africa consisted of gold, practically all of which is extracted from the 45 miles of reef lying along the Witwatersrand. In order to work these mines an ample supply of cheap, unskilled labor is essential. Eight Kaffirs (or Chinese) mean the employment of a white miner, and the employment of eight Kaffirs and a white miner gives indirect employment to three other white men. The Kaffir does not like work—the mines cannot get laborers enough, the Boer farmers have the same difficulty, and roads, railways and other public works are held up because the Kaffir has not yet learned the dignity of labor. Lord Milner experimented with English navvies on railroad construction. His experiment cost the country £60,000, the navvies were dissatisfied (as well they might be), but Lord Milner at least demonstrated what South Africans have always maintained, that South Africa is not a country for white unskilled labor. President Kruger said that £1 per day was the lowest wage a white man ought to earn in South Africa and the figure holds good today. What is a good wage to a Kaffir whose food is produced in the country and whose requirements are very limited, means proverty to a white man for whom even the necessities of life have to be imported. The financial houses controlling the mining industry sought to have legislation introduced by which all adult able bodied Kaffirs under a fair age limit would have to pay a tax sufficiently heavy to induce them to work six months in every two years and thereby obtain an exemption certificate. To compel any person, even indirectly, to work for three months in the year is slavery—thus spake our friends at home.

Coolies to the Rescue.

Being forced to abandon this idea our eyes were turned to China for assistance. Chinese coolies were recruited to work for three years, at the end of which time they were to be repatriated at the expense of the companies importing them, or they could renew their contracts for a further three years at the expiration of which they must definitely be sent back to China. We did not then, nor do we now want Chinese, but we must have them unless we can get the Kaffir to work. The merchant prefers the Kaffir for whilst he spends all his money in South Africa the Chinaman does not. The mining houses don't want Chinese if they can get Kaffirs because the cost of bringing them over and repatriating them makes them more expensive than Kaffirs, and as the bulk of the food for the Chinese has to be imported it constitutes a drain on the country and the expense of feeding them is greater than the cost of maintaining Kaffirs. And here let me remark that high wages are not any inducement to a Kaffir to work. Double the wages of the Kaffir and instead of working six months he would only work for three, return to the country, lie around and drink Kaffir beer, and generally live the life of a pig. Prior to the war the Kaffir could obtain spirituous liquors on the Rand, but the sale of alcoholic beverages to Kaffirs is now punishable with imprisonment, and the only opportunity the Kaffir has to indulge this propensity for liquor is to stay at his kraal and brew Kaffir beer.

Two Reasons Against Chinese.

To return to the Chinese question—in due time the Chinese commenced to arrive, the gold output increased, and eventually we found four thousand more white miners at work than previous to their arrival, and every day found us picking up lost ground. But alas, our hopes were to be deferred yet again. The effect of employing these Chinese was to raise two distinct parties in Merrie England, both demanding the repatriation of the Chinese, but each advancing a different reason, the one as far apart from the other as the north is from the south pole. The anti-Chinese party said, "You are doing the white man out of a job," and the pro-Chinese party said, "You have disgraced the Union Jack by introducing slavery into a British country." Can you for one minute believe that English merchants and traders have no direct interest in the mines would be in favor of Chinese if white men could be employed. Would it not be to their profit if white men were employed, men who would be customers for their stores. And yet you find these men practically unanimous as to the impossibility of white men being employed as unskilled laborers.

South Africa Loyal—But.

By what right do the people of England accuse Englishmen of doing the white man out of a job in order to put in a Chinaman. Have not Anglo-Africans demonstrated their right to be regarded as loyal to their country, their traditions and consequently to their countrymen. The whole country cried out against Chinese labor when the proposal was first mooted, but English legislators took up such an uncompromising position on the Kaffir question that after the Native Labor Commission had concluded its labors and reported that without legislation, the nature of which I have already mentioned, could be introduced that the requirements of the mines, farmers and public bodies could not be supplied, then, and then only, did the people of the Transvaal grant a reluctant consent to their importation. The conditions under which they were to be brought in were discussed in public meetings in every village in the country, under heavy penalties for contravention on the part of the employer the Chinese were restricted to the work of bona-fide unskilled laborers, thus safeguarding the interests of the skilled white laborer.

Chinese Work in Hope.

Then we have the pro-Chinese, who raised the slavery cry and pictured themselves as Twentieth Century Harriet Beecher Stowes. Some of these good people employ a large number of factory hands. How I wish I could in one instant take them from viewing their factory hands and plant them amidst a group of Chinese laborers on the Rand. The former, weary and heavy eyed, having no hope for the future, the latter joyous, thinking that at the end of their six years labor they will be able to return to their native country without the necessity of working another day in their lives. The Chinese slavery cry is arrant humbug. The Chinese are well-housed, well fed and according to their standard they are well paid. That these statements are correct has been amply verified by the manner in which Mr. Churchill's poster was received—a poster offering the Chinese a free trip back to China, for which compliment they were no doubt much obliged to the honorable gentleman, but with few exceptions they could not see their way to accept his kind invitation. Although the Chinese have not been sent back, the uncertainty of the labor situation has caused a cessation of all enterprise, mining and commercial; investors are nervous, banking institutions are marking time, and firms who contemplated extending their premises or their business have called a halt.

Illustrative Incident.

Perhaps the following little incident will best describe the situation. The day of the delivery of the address from the crown I was visited by an American who stated, "I have £800 lying in the National Bank here and I want to buy for cash a residential site running into not more than £300. I want you to raise £500 for me on first mortgage, to be expended on a house, as I must keep £500 in hand myself. I am a diamond drill contractor and need that for working capital." To cut a long story short, after inspecting a block of ground over which I had an option, he left me to consult his better half. Later in the day he returned and informed me that he had practically settled to buy, and would come round in the morning as soon as the bank opened and fix the deal up. He also signified his intention of taking up £500 which I had been able to secure as a loan on first mortgage. The following morning my client walks in and remarks, "Well, I guess we'll have to call that deal off." "Why, what is the matter now?" I queried. "Well, you see, it's just like this—I've been reading the King's speech in this morning's paper and it looks as if this new Government is going to send the Chinese back. Well, if they do I guess there won't be any more diamond drilling work for me 'cos they won't have the labor to open up the properties after they have been proved. I'll want to be off back to America, and I can't take that bit of land with me." And unless that man has shifted it since August 10 that money is still lying idle. Having, I hope, made clear the cause of the present depression in South Africa, I will deal briefly with her future as I see it.

Market for Manufactures and Foodstuffs

The solution of South African difficulties lies in the imposition of a native tax as already defined. Surely, if conscription is justifiable, then the suggested measures are more than reasonable if we reflect that it is to the ultimate benefit of the Kaffirs themselves and will in addition find employment for thousands of men, and build up numberless happy homes in South Africa, and indirectly provide work for thousands of others in the countries which establish themselves on the South African market. Now, do you know what a drill Kaffir has to do in the mines? He has to drill a certain number of inches, his ticket is then punched and he has earned a day's pay. Many of them go down the mine at 6 o'clock and at 10.30 have finished for the day.

Responsible Government.

In January the elections for the newly constituted Transvaal Government are to take place. But for the fact that the Liberal Government has specifically reserved to itself the right to veto any legislation on the native or Chinese questions, I should congratulate the Government which has given us responsible Government, but it is more than a practical joke to give us responsible (?) government in response to our request and at the same time to inform us that under responsible government we may not deal with the very matters which induced us to press for self-government. I am of opinion that the voting in the Transvaal will be on purely racial lines, that neither party will have a working majority (there will probably be a difference of two to four members) and that a joint Government will have to be appointed, which to my mind will be the finest solution of the racial problem. On one point all parties are united in South Africa and that is the native question. Legislation will be introduced in the Transvaal to compel the Kaffir to do what the man has to do, i.e., work for his living and share the country's burdens. The Kaffir enjoys freedom from the fear that a neighboring chief will pounce on him, seize his possessions and terminate his existence. The cost of policing the country and maintaining the Native Affairs Department is enormous and those benefitted must bear the burden. Despite the veto held out as a threat in the constitution, I cannot believe that the Imperial Government will take such steps as will entirely alienate the sympathies of British South Africans. South African affairs have been made subservient to party politics—the ruse has succeeded, but South Africa will no longer tolerate interference with domestic affairs affecting her solvency as a state and as individuals.

A Forecast.

Presuming this legislation to have been duly sanctioned, our native labor force will be equal to any demands made upon it, our white population will be doubled, the capital now lying dormant will flow forth to open up miles of proved, but unworked "banket" reef—the mines in the outside districts will receive the attention they merit and the South African market will become an important factor in the world's trade. The objectionable Chinese will be returned to the land from whence they hail—prosperity will bring about harmonious relations between Boer and Briton, the late war being remembered only as a nightmare that has passed, and unhandicapped by any religious differences, a great nation will spring up, a nation speaking two languages and cherishing the traditions associated with the two mother tongues as being equally their heritage. For many years to come, the whole of South Africa's attention will be directed to the exploitation of her mineral wealth, and will therefore provide an unrivalled market for the disposal of manufactured goods and foodstuffs. South Africa is not an agricultural country in the accepted sense of the word. By the expenditure of many millions on irrigation works she will be able to meet her own requirements in time, and possibly at a later date may be able to export but on this point there is some diversity of opinion. Looking to-day at her list of imports we find that practically everything required to clothe and feed the human race is imported, the following being a summary of her imports for the six months ended December 31, 1905:

Imports—	Value.	Proportion of Total. Per Cent.
Animals	$ 570,359	.7
Articles of food and drink	20,435,103	25.4
Raw materials	5,883,829	7.4
Manufactured articles	51,524,372	63.9
Parcels post	2,065,018	2.6
Total imports (British South Africa)	80,478,681	100.0

Present Trade.

An examination of the countries of origin shows Canada eighth on the list with a trifle over 1 1-2 per cent. of South Africa's total imports, clear evidence that Canada is neglecting this important market.

Statement showing, by countries the value of imports of all merchandise into British South Africa during the six months ended December 31, 1905:

As to representation in South Africa let me conclude by quoting from the correspondent of the London Commercial Intelligence in the Far East, and which also appeared in the May issue of Industrial Canada These remarks are equally applicable to South Africa.

"The first difficulty a manufacturer meets with," he says, "is that of finding a good agent. I am inclined to believe that this difficulty is greater in the east than in any other part of the world. In every district old-established and wealthy firms can be found, most of whom may safely be placed in the category of have beens. Such firms have a greater idea of their own importance than their business ability warrants, * * * * * * * * * *

"In nine cases out of ten it is unwise to appoint as agents in the east old-established, wealthy firms, with a multitude of interests. They have neither the time nor the energy to give to any one department. They think their dignity suffers if they attempt to hustle for business. Should it be necessary to appoint such a firm as agents, the only way in which to make the agency a success is to make such terms as will entail the employment by the agents of a man from the manufacturers works, should the volume of business warrant it. Failing such an arrangement, it is better to give the agency to some local man whose interests are small, but who has energy and good business ability. In such a case it may be necessary for the manufacturer to assist such a man with an allowance for expenses or stock."

"MEAT OF WHEAT" IN ONTARIO.

S. Groff, of the Western Cereal Co., Winnipeg, returned to the Manitoba capital last week from a business trip in Ontario where he arranged for the introduction of "Meat of Wheat" to the Ontario trade. The Western Milling Co., Toronto, have been appointed agents in Ontario and a carload of the new breakfast food has been shipped east.

What there is in the turnout more than would be deemed necessary for the purpose Mr. Waterhouse will charge to advertising. He believes in publicity and making his business attractive. He's getting there, too, and building up a fine trade of the best there is to be had.

At the request of the Dominion Fishery Commission, W. D. Burdis, secretary of the Fraser River Canners' Association, is preparing complete statistics regarding the salmon industry for several years past. They will include a full statement of the amount of capital invested, number of canneries operated, cost of buildings and material, number of cannery employes, average pack of past several years, profits on same, and money disbursed annually to all employes.

S. R. Sangster, of Moncton, fruit inspector, was in St. John, N.B., lately inspecting the shipments of apples arriving there. He says that some which came up the river were of good quality but badly packed. Nova Scotia Gravensteins and Pippins are not up to the mark so far this year and it looks as if the proportion of No. 1 apples will only be one in four. Winter supplies, though, look well. There is to be a special watch against "over facing," which means a fine looking top layer giving false hopes about the fruit below.

The shipments of nearly all Canadian products from Montreal during the present season compare favorably with the corresponding dates of last year. The shipment of wheat has shown the greatest increase, namely 7,639,000 bushels, as compared with 3,474,000 bushels last year, an increase of over 100 per cent. In oats there has been a substantial increase, namely 1,857,000 bushels as compared with 1,361,000 bushels last year. Flour is another notable increase, no less than 448,000 barrels, as compared with 198,000 barrels last year, having been shipped. In butter there has been a perceptible falling off, which, however, has been more than made up by the increased amount of cheese which has gone forward.

Now that the company has acquired a factory in Brantford the territory appertaining to the Toronto office is made up of the cities Toronto and Hamilton. Mr. Verey has been associated with his uncle for some years and is thoroughly conversant with the business. He is a young man of good address and abundant energy, so that success is assured him.

The decadence of the Ingersoll Dairymen's Board of Trade and Cheese Market is accounted for by the changing conditions in the cheese trade. In former years the Ingersoll cheese market every Tuesday was a scene of great activity, and the prices controlled other markets to a great extent. Now buying and selling is conducted every day in the week, chiefly at the factories, and though more cheese is manufactured in the district than ever before, there are not so many outward indications of activity because transactions are not concentrated in the town on one day in the week.

Captain Worsnop, who succeeded in obtaining a contract from the Government of Mexico for a monthly service of steamships between Canada and Mexico, has arrived in British Columbia. According to this contract, which was signed by the Mexican Government conditionally that the Canadian authorities should ratify the agreement, Capt. Worsnop's company, the English Steamship Co., is to receive an annual subsidy of $100,000 from the Government of each country. The Canadian Government is said to be committed to the scheme and papers will be signed upon the arrival in Ottawa of Capt. Worsnop.

The Brockville Poultry Association has proved its usefulness by the success attained by the poultry show at the fair in that town. It was stated by the judges that the quality exhibited equaled that of Toronto and was better than at nearly every other large show in the province. Next year increased accommodation will be needed again and many new classes will be added to the list. The following is the list of officers elected: Hon. president, Judge McDonald; president, W. M. Osborne; vice-president E. McDougall; secretary-treasurer, W. P. Carswell; directors, J. E. Fidler, Rev. Mr. Strachu, S. Stephens, George Howison. Charles Noyce.

Some late estimates of the California raisin crop make it 65,000 tons, which is 15,000 tons more than it is calculated to be by conservative people, who, however, adhere to their original estimate of 50,000 tons.

The plants of the Fleishmann Company at Baltimore, Buffalo and Cliffsville have been closed, and in future the company will carry on its business from a central location. Formerly they operated one of the largest yeast making plants in the world at East Millstone, down in New Jersey. All machinery has been moved to Cincinnati, where in future the business will be managed.

It is announced in Liverpool, according to an Associated Press despatch, that 40 merchandise concerns of that city, representing the whole trade in tinned meat, have organized a special department of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce. It is stated that there is no intention of entering upon a campaign of publicity, but a scheme will be considered for stemming the disorganization and loss which has fallen generally upon the trade.

According to a despatch from New Haven, Conn., the 1906 oyster set is a failure. An engineer examined the oyster beds in Long Island Sound and the set was declared to be almost a complete failure. Oyster growers will lose something like half a million dollars in consequence. Cold water during the spawning period in July and August is blamed for the failure.

"The salmon fisheries of Alaska have quietly grown to be the largest single fishery in the United States, if not the world," says the St. John Telegram. The extensive coast line of the territory seems everywhere abundant with halibut and a little off the coast there exist great cod banks. The salmon fishing is now wholly done for canning and the extent to which this part of the industry has grown is more familiar to the world than any other.

A meeting of creditors of Messrs. Sibbald & Stewart, grocery and crockery merchants of Gravenhurst, who assigned a couple of weeks ago, was held Tuesday afternoon in the office of the assignee, N. L. Martin, Toronto. A statement was presented showing the assets to be $5,100, and the liabilities to be $7,000. There are fifty-five creditors, the majority of whom are in Toronto. No offer was made for the stock and other property, and the assignee was instructed to proceed with the winding up.

G. L. Lucas, a pineapple grower, of Jamaica, has established the Norbrook Canning Co. on the island to can tropical fruits for the Canadian market. He has a pinery upon which 166,000 pines are growing and the lack of adequate shipping facilities has proved a handicap to marketing the fruit while fresh. Canada consumes a considerable quantity of preserved pineapple and it comes principally from Singapore and Hawaii. In the exhibit of West Indian products at the exhibition in Toronto this year there were some fine samples of preserved pineapples. Anderson & Powis, brokers, Toronto, have been retained to push the sale of West Indian products in Ontario.

LIGHTNING USE OF FIGURES

Some Examples in Mental Arithmetic that will Prove Instructive to Grocers—Advantage of Using a Convenient Multiple.

The number 10 forms a convenient base from which all numbers having a value of over 9 and under 11 can be figured readily. First multiply by 10, and then by making the necessary fractional addition or subtraction arrive at the desired result, thus :

EXAMPLE NO. 1.

What would 156 yards of gingham cost at 9½ cents per yard ? Answer : $14.82.

Process—At 10 cents per yard it would cost $15.60, and at 9½ cents 78 cents less, or $14.82.

EXAMPLE NO. 2.

What would 244 dozen eggs cost at 10¾ cents per dozen ? Answer : $26.23.

Process—At 10 cents per dozen they would cost $24.40, and by adding to that sum $1.83, the cost at ¾ of a cent, you at once obtain the correct result.

A little practice along the above lines should enable the student to perform any example like the foregoing instantly and mentally.

EXAMPLES FOR PRACTICE.

1. Multiply 148 by 9¼. Answer : (1,480—111), 1,369.

2. Multiply 164 by 10¼. Answer : (1,640 plus 41), 1,681.

3. Multiply 268 by 9½. Answer : (2,680—134), 2,546.

4. Multiply 442½ by 10½. Answer : (4,425 plus 221), 4,646.

Adding or Subtracting a Pitfall.

The main thing to be observed in working examples under the above rule is whether the fractional sum is to be added or deducted. With proper care exercised in this direction no mistakes ever should be made.

To multiply any two figures by 11 : Add the figures to be multiplied together and write their sum between them.

EXAMPLE NO. 3.

What would 63 pounds of rice cost at 11 cents per pound ? Answer : $6.93.

Process—The sum of the two figures composing the multiplicand is 9, which figure, written between the other two, gives the correct answer.

Note—When the sum of the two figures amounts to more than 9, add the overplus to the left hand figure, thus : 87 by 11 equals 957 ; having 1 to carry makes the left hand figure 9 instead of 8.

When three figures are to be multiplied : Consider the two left hand figures together, thus : 187 by 11 equals 2,057 ; 18 and 7 are 25, the 5 making the tens figure in the answer while the 2 added to the 18 makes it read 20.

When multiplying yards or pounds by 12½ cents, the besy way to treat them is to consider the quantity as so many dollars and take ⅛ of them for your answer, thus :

EXAMPLE NO. 4.

What would 486 pounds cheese cost at 12½ cents per pound ? Answer : $60.75.

Process—Either take ⅛ of $486.00, or better still, take ⅛ of $480.00, which is evenly divisible, and then add 75 cents for the odd 6 pounds.

Often you can figure by 13½ to advantage, by first getting the result at 12½ and adding as many cents to your answer as there are yards or pounds in the multiplicand, thus :

EXAMPLE NO. 5.

What would 320 pounds butter cost at 13½ cents per pound ? Answer : $43.20.

You can see readily that at 12½ cents per pound the above quantity of butter would cost $40. By simply adding the cost at 1 cent to your first product you at once obtain the desired result. This rule is worth practicing, and you can use it also in figuring by 11½, in the latter case deducting instead of adding.

EXAMPLES FOR PRACTICE.

1. What would 56 yards dress goods cost at 13½ cents per yard ? Answer, $7.56.

2. What would 168 dozen eggs cost at 11½ cents per dozen ? Answer, $19.32.

3. What would 364 pounds soap cost at 13½ cents per pound ? Answer, $49.14.

4. What would 248 cans peaches cost at 11½ cents per can ? Answer, $28.52.

Fifteen Simplifies the Process.

Fifteen is one and one-half times ten, and can easily be figured by in that way.

EXAMPLE NO. 6.

What would 364 yards cloth cost at 15 cents per yard ? Answer, $54.60.

Process—Add to $36.40 one-half of itself, or $18.20, and you have the complete answer ; or, better still, figure what 360 yards would come to by adding together $36 and $18, afterwards annexing 60 cents for the 4 odd yards.

The advantages of performing operations in the latter way are many. For instance, you soon learn by heart that 360 at 15 cents comes to $54, and adding on the extra cents for the odd yards is easily accomplished. When you learn these things you can just glance at any example like the one we are discussing and say instantly $54.60.

EXAMPLES FOR PRACTICE.

1. What cost 165 yards cloth at 15 cents per yard ? Answer, $24.75.

2. What cost 88 pounds butter at 15 cents per pound ? Answer, $13.20.

3. What cost 264¾ dozen eggs at 15 cents per dozen ? Answer, $39.71.

Do the last example in this way : 260 dozen would cost $39, and 4 dozen 60 cents, and ¾ dozen 11 cents.

Another price commonly met with in business is 17½ cents. You can many times get your result when multiplying by it by first multiplying by 10 and then by 7½, adding the two products together, thus :

EXAMPLE NO. 7.

What cost 44 yards cloth at 17½ cents per yard ? Answer, $7.70.

You should, by using the rule we gave in a former lesson for figuring by 7½, be able to do the above at a glance, just saying 4.40 and 3.30. This ought to be sufficient instruction in handling this number to those who have learned to multiply by 7½.

Easy to Figure by 25.

The next number to be considered is 25, an easy one to figure by, the same rules applying to it that apply to 12½. It also bears certain relations to two other numbers frequently met with in business, 22½ being 10 per cent. less, and 27½ being 10 per cent. greater than it. You will often find it handy to figure by the last two numbers, thus :

EXAMPLES FOR PRACTICE.

1. What cost 64 dozen eggs at 27½ cents per dozen ? Answer, $17.60.

2. What cost 32 bushels oats at 27½ cents per bushel ? Answer, $8.80.

3. What cost 56 yards cloth at 22½ cents per yard ? Answer, $12.60.

4. What cost 144½ bushels corn at 27½ cents per bushel ? Answer, $39.74.

In the last example figure 140 bushels first, then add the 4½ bushels, thus : $35 plus $3.50 plus $1.24.

The next number is 37½. This is best considered as one-half of 75, thus :

EXAMPLE NO. 8.

What cost 48 yards cloth at 37½ cents per yard ? Answer, $18.00.

Process—¾ of $48.00 (what it would come to at 75 cents), is $36.00, and half of that is $18.00.

EXAMPLES FOR PRACTICE.

1. What cost 164 pounds butter at 37½ cents per pound ? Answer, $61.50.

2. What cost 84 yards dress goods at 37½ cents per yard ? Answer, $31.50.

3. What cost 92 bushels potatoes at 37½ cents per bushel ? Answer, $34.50.

4. What cost 142½ yards cloth at 37½ cents per yard ? Answer, $53.44.

In the last example take ½ of ¾ of $140 and add 94 cents for the 2½ yards.

TO PROVE ANY SUM IN DIVISION.
EXAMPLE NO. 11.

$$\underline{483}$$

Reduce the figures in the divisor and quotient to single figures. Multiply them together and, having again reduced them to a single figure, add the remainder. The final result should equal the sum of the dividend reduced, by addition, to a single figure.

DIED BY THE YARD.

"Hullo. Geordy, what's up, lad?" said an English pitman to his marra one day. "Is your wife deed or what?" "Na, na lad!" said Geordy, "it's worse than that." "Had away lad," said Jackie; "let's hev it. Vivvent ye look se bubbly; tell your morra what yor trouble is." "Oh," said Geordy, "the dog's dead. He swallened the tape measure!" "By! that's narking," said Jackie. "How did he die? By inches, I suppose. eh?" "You're wrang," said Geordy, "for he went roond the back and died by the yard!"

DEFENCE OF THE SMALL MAN

Writer in an English Paper Calls Attention to a Dangerous Tendency in Modern Commercialism—Small Trader the Bone and Sinew of the Country.

Against the policy on the part of manufacturers of trading to the large buyer and despising the individual merchant of less means, "R. S." writes in an English exchange as follows: "It will be an evil day for the trade of this country when the small man is crowded out of existence. I have no desire to run contrary to the spirit of the times; still I cannot but think that it is against all good public policy that the small man should be eliminated and his place taken by the corporation, which has neither a body to be kicked nor a soul to be saved. The independent trader, or, in other words, the small man, is the bone and sinew of the country, and the chief upholder of our trade. It is a thousand pities that his sturdy spirit of independence and self-reliance should be annihilated, and that we should become a nation of servants and mere wage-earners for the benefit of a very few multiple shop-owners. We would thus create a few plutocrats whom the rest of the nation would serve, and this would be disastrous to our oldest and best traditions

Large Buyers Catered to.

"The tendency in every direction is against the independent trader. The alleged protection societies contemptuously report of him, 'This is a small man of very limited means, not good enough for credit.' The wholesale houses instruct their representatives not to waste their time calling upon the small man, but to concentrate their energies upon the large buyers. The outcome of all this will be that the small man must go under, and his place will be taken by the huge monopolists. Manufacturers and wholesale houses will also be in the hands of the multiple shop-owners, who are the hardest of taskmasters.

"Proof of this statement is to be found in the recent crisis in the leather trade. It will be remembered that leather commenced to advance in value some two years ago, and owing to a variety of causes which need not be enumerated, the raw material has continued scarce and dear up to the present moment. When the advance first set in the boot manufacturers did not increase their prices, as it was thought that the advance was only temporary, and that values would soon settle down to their normal level. The time came when the manufacturers could not produce at their old rates, even after they had taken everything possible out of material and labor. Then they asked their customers to pay a little more. The despised small man was willing enough to do this, but when it came to the multiple shop-owner it was another matter. The heads of these establishbents absolutely refused to pay an increase even when the cost of material had advanced 25 per cent. One of them, when asked for an advance, cynically replied that he couldn't pay it as it would compel him to alter his whole range of window tickets, and he did not care to go to that expense. The manufacturers lost money, and more than one old and reputable firm was compelled to suspend payment, whilst a number of small failures was considerably above the average The action of the multiple shop-owners brought many other manufacturers to the verge of ruin.

Small Men Get Short End.

"What has happened to the boot manufacturers may also befall the wholesale and distributing houses in our trades, that is, if we permit the multiple shop to have it all its own way. The wholesale houses are inclined to support the big man through thick and thin, and to let the small man go to the wall. This is a fatal policy. All the best lots and best bargains are first submitted to the big buyer, who is also given the heaviest discount, and altogether placed upon the most favored terms. On the other hand, the small man is considered fair game. He is charged the highest prices, and given the shortest terms. There is no reason why this plan should be so universally adopted; on the contrary, all good trading is against it. The big buyer becomes insolent and dictatorial, and squeezes the merchant and manufacturer alike. The remedy lies in the hands of the latter, and it consists in ungrudging and generous support of the small man.

"The multiple shop has become an enormous power in trade, and its directors and managers are tempted to wield that power unmercifully. There are many large concerns which are so much run after and waited upon by the representatives of the wholesale houses that they think there must be 25s. in their sovereign, and they act accordingly. Who has not heard this or that traveler boast that he has just booked an opening order from this or that large house? Travelers are invariably booking orders of this description at remarkably low-cut prices, sometimes at prices which actually show a loss or at the best an inadequate margin of profit.

"The wholesalers accept the low-cut lines just to open, and the traveler assures them that they will get their own back on the next transaction. The next transaction never comes off. The big buyer knows the game just as well as the traveler, and he has no intention of permitting the bagman to 'get in at him' next time. He takes good care of that. There is an unlimited supply of people trying to open with him, and to offer tempting lines with that praiseworthy object in view. Having bought so well he can afford to sell low, and thus drive another nail into the coffin of his small opponents, who find that their huge rival is able to mark certain lines in his window at a less price than they can buy wholesale.

"Some travelers are so short-sighted that they think it a cunning thing to get big prices from their small customers, and openly boast of their prowess in this respect. This is the old story of killing the goose with the golden eggs. It is far better for everyone concerned, individually and collectively, that there should be 30 small tradesmen in a town or district than a single large concern. The big houses are never tired of boasting that they can buy well, and there is no doubt that this boast is justified of facts. But the good bargains they procure must be at the cost of someone, and that someone is usually a manufacturer or wholesale house. It is foolish, then, to sneer at the small man, and to describe him as a tin-pot or tupence-ha'penny individual whose business is not worth looking after This is a great mistake, my masters, and unless the error is corrected at once we are all certain to suffer for it. When we have eliminated the small man ,and turned him into a timeserving employe carrying for favor with a man at the top, we shall have killed off the characteristic virtues of the race, not the least of which are independence and initiative."

The business men in a Minnesota town hold a "Market Day" on the first Saturday of each month. Prizes were offered in June for the best lot of Spring chickens (more than six), best veal calf and Spring calf, best lots of vegetables, biggest load of oats and biggest lot of eggs. Special bargains were features at the different stores represented. The local band furnished music during the day, and in the afternoon there was a ball game. Two novel features were an exhibit room where the farmers could display their produce and an auction, conducted by a skillful auctioneer, only one per cent. being charged for his services. Special attention was called to the high prices paid for wheat, compared with prices paid at other points.

J. M. Kirk, representing Robert Greig Co., Limited, Toronto, was a caller on the Montreal trade this week. He favored The Grocer with a call and reported business A1.

CANADIAN PRODUCTS ABROAD.

Canadian products shipped through the port of Montreal compare favorably with those of last year. Figures compiled by the Montreal Board of Trade show that while export business in some lines shows a falling off, yet on the whole trade has been better so far this year than last. Between the opening of navigation and the first of September no less than 448,000 barrels of flour left Montreal for European and African ports. In 1905 only 198,000 barrels were exported during this period. Consequently there has been a large increase in foreign trade. Milling companies have given particular attention to the development of the South African trade, apparently, since the business done with firms in South African ports has been very large. At the same time our trade with the Old Country has been going ahead at a good rate. In wheat exports there is noticeable a gain of over 100 per cent., while there has been an increase in oat shipments also. Cheese exports have been excellent, despite the continued upward tendency of the market, which, one would think, would have a depressing effect upon export trade. It is probable that the figures shown would have been even larger than they are, had market conditions been more favorable. The high prices on butter have had the effect of curtailing the demand from Europe, and there is noticeable a falling off in shipments this season as compared with last year. It is worthy of mention that over one million bushels of flax was exported through Montreal up to September this year, while none was sent out in 1905.

The table hereunder shows just how figures for the two years compare :

Wheat	7,639,000 bush.	3,474,000 bush.
Corn	2,282,000 bush.	4,185,000 bush.

FARMERS OPPOSE DUTY ON TIN.

Another section of the community has risen to enter its protest against the imposition of a duty on tin plate as urged by the professional company promoters who during the past year have been unloading on Canadian investors stocks in the proposed works at Morrisburg.

The near approach of the opening of the session of the Dominion Parliament, at which it is expected important tariff legislation will be introduced by the Government, has encouraged a large body of farmers in Prince Edward County to protest against the proposed duty as an additional tax upon their industry. They point out that not only are they users of the products of the tinware factories, whose goods would have to be advanced in price if a duty was imposed, but as part owners and sellers of goods to canneries, who use millions of cans every year, they would feel the pinch severely if a duty was imposed.

The tin plate company promoters in their request for a duty of 33 1-3 per cent. claimed that this duty would only advance the cost of a tin can one-fifth of a cent, but even at this minimum view of the situation the increased price would mean about $6,000 per year extra to only one cannery in Prince Edward County. If each of the fruit canning factories in Ontario and salmon canneries in British Columbia are forced to contribute to the Morrisburg promoters on a similar basis the extent of the imposition can hardly be gauged.

Farmers in other parts of the country should take up the agitation against the proposed duty and hardware merchants and grocers could to advantage to the trade co-operate with the farmers in urging the local members of Parliament to stand firm against the blandishments of the lobbyists who may press for the duty at the next session of Parliament.

A SPECIES OF BLACKMAIL.

A few days ago the manager of a large manufacturing concern in a certain Canadian city was visited by a man who introduced himself as a merchant who occasionally bought goods from his firm. He stated that in his town the particular denomination to which he belonged was building a new church and he was soliciting subscriptions from the business men from whom he bought goods.

The manager in question was, on principle, opposed to contributions under such conditions. He considers them a species of blackmail. When he told the visiting merchant this, in as polite a way as possible, the latter took a note book and wrote some words therein, remarking as he did so, "I suppose you know what I am writing?" On answering that he did not, the merchant remarked: "Well, I am just marking down here the name of your firm so that when we are buying goods in your line again it will be a reminder for us to go somewhere else."

While there are a great many merchants, in fact the great majority of them, who will not lend themselves to any such species of blackmail, it is evident that there is still one here and there who is not above the practice.

Whether practiced by consumer or retailers, or by the latter on manufacturers or wholesalers, this species of blackmail should be discouraged on every occasion. And if retailers desire to be relieved of the evil they in their turn should not practice it upon those from whom they buy goods. It is a subject that the retail merchants' association and boards of trade throughout the country should deal with, for the evil is still with us in a virulent form.

POTATOES IN GERMANY.

In Germany in 1905 there were 8,195,444 acres planted in potatoes, from which were produced 48,323,353 metric tons, or 1,775,579,073 bushels of 60 lbs. each, which was an average of 217 bushels to the acre. With the exception of the year 1901, which was specially favorable for the cultivation of the potato, this crop exceeds all previous years. The average price of potatoes during the campaign year 1904-05 was 42.58 marks ($10.13) per 1,000 kilograms (2,204.6 pounds) or 27.6 cents per bushel, which would make the value of the German potato crop of that year $490,059,948.

In 1904 the potato crop of the United States was placed at 332,830.300 bushels, of a farm value of $150,673,392, or 45.2 cents per bushel. According to Dr. W. Behrens, one of Germany's experts in 1901, out of the 65,000,000 acres of arable land 8,100,000 acres, or 12 1-2 per cent., were planted in potatoes. The doctor claims that Germany plants more potatoes, in proportion to its area and number of inhabitants, than any other civilized country.

The most important ways in which the potato is utilized in Germany are: For human food; for fodder for animals; in the industrial arts for the distillation of alcohol. and for the manufacture of starch, starch products, such as starch sugar, starch syrup, dextrin etc. The best grades are used for eating, the next best for fodder, and the lowest grades for the distillation of alcohol.

There are no statistics avilable which would indicate the consumption of the potato for human food purposes, but it may be safely estimated at 50 per cent. of the total production.

A SHINING JUDGE.

The delays of the law have become notorious, and many a business man in venge has pocketed a loss rather than enenge has pocketed a loss rather than n tangle himself in the net of the lawyers. The lawyers at the bar are not wholly to blame; for some of the responsibility for this tardiness of litigation must be shouldered by the lawyers on the bench.

"Judgment deferred," how often have those leaden words weighed down the hopes of litigants looking for a speedy solution of their differences. It has become a habit of the judiciary. They must sleep over a case and some of them hybernate. Probably seventy-five per cent. of decisions are in regard to questions of fact and not in regard to law at all. These decisions could more easily and more accurately be arrived at when the facts and arguments are fresh and clean than when they have withered to a few skeleton notes.

This habit of procrastination, and that's all it is, a habit, and one of the hardest to overcome—is brought into relief by the practice of an Ontario High Court judge, not many years elevated. His appointment was regarded somewhat dubiously when made, but litigants and honest lawyers, at any rate lawyers who are given to getting their clients' business cleaned up, have lived to bless his name, just because he has forsaken the traditions of his elders and refusing to be bound by the habits of generations of judges, has endeavored so far as possible to give his decisions on the spot. To facilitate this procedure he has looked up the law bearing on cases to come before him so that when sized of the facts he was in a position to give a decision before leaving the court.

Praise this course as one may, it is nothing more than business. Any wide-awake man of business or affairs would spurn to do otherwise. Dilatoriness is the death of business. It's a cardinal sin of commerce. If the judiciary could rid themselves of it they would stand infinitely higher in the regard of the business interests of the country.

LONGFELLOW'S MARKET NOTES.

An English publisher recently bought a quantity of letters of the poet Longfellow. Among them were the following, on the back of which is inscribed "Written for 'The Secret.'" They are headed "Commercial Intelligence ; Review of the Market," and the following are some of the extracts :

Cotton, drooping ; particularly in shirt collars in warm weather.

Flour, quiet ; except when mixed with yeast ; then it rises and is anything but quiet.

Groceries, with a downward tendency ; all good groceries have this tendency, particularly sugar and preserves.

Hides, a shade easier ; mine is since the cold weather is over.

Mackerel, without change ; but they have a good many greenbacks among them.

Oats, dull ; the horses are of quite a different opinion. So are all young gentlemen who "feel their oats."

Shingles, steady ; when they are well nailed down ; otherwise the wind is apt to blow them off.

Pork, heavy ; it should never be eaten for supper as it is apt to produce nightmare.

Corn, active ; all corns are particularly active as the season advances.

Whisky, unchanged ; except when made into whisky punch.

Alcohol, quiet and steady ; it may be so, but it makes those who drink it noisy and unsteady.

Wool, quiet ; except when people get into each other's wool.

WINDOW DRESSING COMPETITION

The Canadian Grocer has instituted a monthly window dressing competition. Every up-to-date grocer should take a hand. The prizes are $5, $3 and $2, but advantage far in excess of this acknowledgement of superiority will be gained by every grocer who improves his window dressing. All that is necessary is to send a photograph of the window entered in the competition and a written description of it to the editor of The Canadian Grocer, 10 Front street east, Toronto. This is a fine opportunity for grocers to stimulate the interest of their clerks in window dressing and develop latent talent in that direction.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The British Ambassador at Tokio, Japan, has received and forwarded to the Canadian Government a letter of thanks from the heads of the Japanese villages in the famine districts thanking the Canadians for their generosity in sending to Japan flour for the relief of the sufferers.

The Indian Government's trade journal draws attention to the steady growth in the imports of soap into the Empire. There are indications that the natives, who wash very frequently, are learning the merits of soap, and the trade is one of great possibilities.

British trade returns for July show a remarkable expansion of business. The total imports are £48,609,704, an increase of £3,800,000 over the figures for July, 1905, which exceeded that for the previous July by an almost similar amount. Total exports were £39,502,-287, being no less than £9,400,000 in excess of the exports during July, 1905. Taking the figures for the seven months of 1906 to date, imports are £31,300,-000 above 1905, and £35,160,000 above 1904. The exports for seven months of 1906 show an increase of £29,890,000 above same period in 1905.

How far the United States is interested in the Cuban rebellion is indicated by three facts of commerce and finance : The trade between the two countries last year exceeded $120,000,000 ; the Cuban debt, $35,000,000, is held mostly in the United States ; more than $100,000,000 of American capital is now invested in the island. Canadian, British, German, Spanish, and Cuban investors as well as American will look to Uncle Sam to take a hand if the Cuban politicians don't pretty soon bury the hatchet.

TRADE ON THE PACIFIC COAST

Canadian Public Men Should Know the West—New Zealand Steamship Service —Flour Mill for Vancouver—Markets and Market News.

Vancouver, B.C., Sept. 27, '06.

The visit of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association is over, and as it was three years ago, to the members from the east—the far east, as the clever and eloquent president-elect termed it at the Earl Grey banquet last night—the visit has been one of unalloyed pleasure, and some profit indirectly will also be theirs. The progress of the past three years in the Pacific province has quite kept pace with the marvellous growth and development of the three sisters of the plains. That a certain amount of beneficial missionary work will be done by the eastern manufacturers among their less fortunate stay-at-home brethren is assured. Premier McBride in his brilliant address at the Earl Grey banquet spoke of the difficulties the administration of the province had always labored under, and in emphatic terms stated that he felt the greatest obstacle had always been lack of knowledge of British Columbia by the public men of the east. He instanced a recent visitor, an M.P., who on his return east had expressed his intention of moving in the next session of the House of Commons that the whole Parliament on adjournment make a tour of the west in a body, and see and learn for themselves. British Columbia's premier emphasized his views on this point by declaring that no man, especially if a public man, was thoroughly a Canadian until he had seen and made himself familiar with the whole of Canada from ocean to ocean, a sentiment in which he was cheered to the echo by the visiting Manufacturers' Association members from all parts of Canada. It may be specially mentioned that the banquet, though called by courtesy the Earl Grey banquet, was in reality tendered jointly to the visiting members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, to the Forestry Association then in session in Vancouver, as well as to His Excellency.

The New Zealand-British Columbia direct steamer service has been, in the language of the showman, "an instantaneous success." The big steamer Pondo, which arrived some time ago with a full cargo from New Zealand and other South Sea points, sailed this week with over 6,000 tons of cargo. True a large proportion was lumber, of which the vessel carried over a million feet. But several hundred tons of British Columbia products were also included. In the items were over two hundred tons of potatoes, a large consignment of onions and 2,000 cases of tinned salmon. The agents state that the vessel has already booked for her next trip inbound to this port her full capacity of cargo. A shipment of raw sugar will be brought from the Fiji Islands to the B. C. Sugar Refinery. Outbound, the promise of cargo is equally encouraging.

An important part of the steamer's cargo outgoing this trip was 300 tons of exhibits going to the New Zealand Exposition at Christchurch, which begins in November.

Flour made in Vancouver will soon be an article of common use both locally and in export markets. It is announced that the first mill to be built in this city will soon be under construction. The Hall Elevator Co., which has the distinction of having erected the first elevator, will put up the first mill. Contracts will be let shortly for the building, which is to contain plant for capacity of 500 barrels per day. The first shipment of wheat to the Orient will be made by the Hall Elevator Co. next month per SS. Athenian to China. It will consist of ten thousand bushels, and is but a small portion of the order, which cannot be filled completely until grain begins to come in more freely in Alberta.

This week the creameries of the Fraser Valley, which practically comprise the butter-producing factories of the mainland of British Columbia, put up the price for the rest of the season 5c. per pound. It now sells to the trade at 30c., which means that the consumer is now paying 35c. for fresh local creamery. The price of fresh dairy local made is up in sympathy, bringing as high as 27½c. wholesale. Eastern creamery butter is ranging up from 26c. to 28c., and the supply is not large. Fresh local eggs are still scarce, and likely to be. They now command up to 40c. wholesale. Eastern packed eggs are quoted from 24c. to 27c.

Shortage of butter during the coming Winter is feared by the trade, unless supplies come in from the east in larger quantities than they have been doing. The last shipments of butter and eggs for Dawson and northern points went out on the SS. Princess Beatrice, which sailed on Saturday with a cargo which included 4,000 cases of eggs and several hundred cases of butter.

Local apples were the feature of the fruit market the past week. At New Westminster weekly market over 500 boxes were on sale from up-river points. In the city warehouses large stocks are now held, and Okanagan apples are also being offered. The quality of this year's apple crop, from present offerings, is away up in the list of averages. Gravensteins are the present favorite, as this variety is a splendid table fruit. It commands $1 per box and up. Other local coast varieties, as King, Wealthy, Greening, bring from 65c. to 90c. per box. The Okanagan apples are bringing up to $1.50 per box, wholesale.

Okanagan peaches are still offering, though in limited quantities. The quality is perfect, and while the price is rather high, being up to $1.75 and $2.25 wholesale, there are but few crates yet to sell. One firm, the Oscar Brown Co., has cornered the market. Local pears are scarce, as also plums and prunes, while crab apples are plentiful as compared with former years. Prices run 2c. to 2½c. per lb. for pears, 2c. for crab apples, and prunes $1 to $1.25 per crate.

California grapes are plentiful, but prices are fairly high. They quote at $2 and $2.25 per crate. Oranges are offering more freely, and prices are a little lower, being now $4.50 to $5 per crate. Lemons still quote at $8. A few pineapples brought in by the Australian steamer, $4 per dozen.

Quite a movement still keeps up in potatoes owing to export trade. The shipment to New Zealand referred to above, supplementing that to Australia a week ago, of several hundred tons has cleaned up the local market for the time. The only danger is that some of the stock shipped was rather immature, a trifle too green, thus endangering its keeping quality, in which case the venture will not turn out as profitable as anticipated. The shipment of such commodities as potatoes is not yet in the specialized condition which such a trade demands.

Market prices for potatoes vary from $10 to $15 per ton at the present moment. Indications are that the crop will be heavy. Other vegetables are slack this week. Prices in leading lines are: Tomatoes, $1.50 per crate; cabbage, 1½c. per lb.; onions, 2c. and 2¼c. per lb.; carrots, etc., 85c. per hundred lbs.; cucumbers, 20c. per dozen; lettuce, $1.25 per crate.

SWIFT TO SWALLOW ARMOUR.

Rumor of Union of Packing Interests—Mr. Armour Tired.

It is rumored that Swift & Co. are about to absorb Armour & Co., Swift & Co. having made a proposition and J. Ogden Armour being tired of the outcry against the packers and anxious for social distinction.

The corporation of Armour & Co. was formed in 1900 to take over the entire business of the firm of Armour & Co., which was established by Philip D. Armour in 1860. The company's issued capital is $20,000,000, but nothing is ever given out as to the earnings or the dividends paid.

Swift & Co.'s shares have recently been advancing so radically that Chicago has been industriously speculating on the cause thereof. Early in the current year the capital stock was increased from $35,000,000 to $50,000,000. Stockholders were given the right to subscribe at par for the $15,000,000 new stock at the rate of three shares of new stock for every seven held by them. The Swift shares are to-day selling at 110 and 111. Seven per cent. dividends have been paid regularly since 1898.

EARLY CLOSING.

The Retail Grocers' Association of Ottawa have passed a resolution in favor of the stores closing at 6 o'clock ordinarily and at 9 o'clock on Saturdays and days before holidays.

H. P. Eckardt & Co. are sending out some very choice new crop Eleme figs.

E. A. Du Vernet, K.C., has been instructed by the Attorney-General's Department to conduct the prosecution for the Crown in the charge of conspiracy against the Wholesale Grocers' Guild. The Assizes at Hamilton begin on October 8.

Markets and Market Notes

QUEBEC MARKETS.

ABBREVIATIONS—
Fish—Revised.
Currants—Lower.

Montreal, October 3, 1906.

Trade is reported as being in a very healthy condition at present. While there has been nothing done in a large way, yet business has been of fair proportions and jobbers are satisfied with the trend of events. There has been no change in sugar since last report, the market being steady. Teas are interesting inasmuch that everybody is calling for Japans, which are not obtainable. Prices are firmly maintained. Black teas are offering at attractive prices, but the trouble comes from the fact that everyone is asking for Japans, which cannot be supplied. In canned goods the recently issued prices on tomatoes and corn form the theme of conversation among jobbers and retailers. The former do not yet quite understand why prices were made so high on tomatoes at the opening. The wholesale trade is experiencing considerable trouble with their customers, who are cutting down their orders because of the high prices demanded. Coffee, except for the fact that Mocha is a little higher in the primary market, is unchanged. Spices are quiet locally, as is also molasses. There has been a reaction in currants in Greece, and prices are lower than at the time of our last report, when the tendency of the market was upward. Reports from Denia state that Valencia raisins continue to advance, while California raisins are quoted ¼c. higher this week. Prunes are also higher. Labor troubles on the Pacific coast are still bothering the packers. Honey is very scarce, as are also peels. Beans are high in price, spot stocks being low. New crop beans are not expected to arrive in quantity until the end of this month.

Collections continue good from all sections of the country.

CANNED GOODS—There is still considerable discussion among the trade about the new prices which have been given out for tomatoes and corn. The jobbers are at a loss to understand why the canners should have made a price on tomatoes so high for the opening, and whenever two or three "get together" the new lists are sure to crop up for discussion. On some sides the opinion is expressed that the canning factories are adopting the method of the Brazilian Government as regards coffee—limiting the output in order to keep up the price. This, of course, is only the talk in some sections of the trade. But meanwhile the prices have been made and business must go on. Jobbers are receiving letters daily asking for the new prices and instructing him to hold order (which was taken at open prices) until he heard from him. In many cases orders are being halved, and in most other cases are reduced to a greater or lesser extent. Grocers in some districts are asking for old goods, in the hopes of obtaining some slight concession in price, but as there are no stocks of last year's output to speak of, the new prices must be met. In other lines there is the usual demand for Fall trade.

SUGAR—The market this week is just about normal. Prices are steady at the recent advance. Fairly heavy buying is being done by the trade, but the market is looked upon as likely to remain steady for some little time. This is according to present indications, but it must be remembered that something may occur to disturb the situation. The Cuban troubles are not affecting the market materially at present, although when the revolution started, it will be remembered there was considerable excitement. Things are now taken to be settled down, to a certain extent, and further developments which will affect the market here are not expected.

TEA—Since last week there has been practically no change in the tea situation. The market for Japans is in a very healthy condition. Prices are well maintained, and inclined to advance rather than remain at a standstill. Japans which formerly were purchaseable at 16c. now command 17c. and sometimes 17½c. The whole trouble in the tea situation, as far as Japans are concerned, is the great scarcity. The amount of tea sent to the interior of the Island of Japan was much larger this year than on former occasions, and this, with the fact that the crop was much shorter than last year's small yield, creates the present almost bare market. Buyers continue to come forward, but tea merchants are obliged to explain the situation as best they can, and take any order given without being able to guarantee their filling. Locally there is some tea in second hands, and this is being pretty well cleaned up. There is some interest displayed in blacks, which are in good supply, and for which prices are very good. There is no change noticeable in the market for China greens, while Ceylon and Indian greens are featureless.

COFFEE—There is practically nothing new in the coffee situation since our last report. Mochas are slightly higher, but otherwise there is nothing new. Javas are selling from 18c. to 26c., while fancy lines bring as much as 30c.

FOREIGN DRIED FRUITS—Currants which have been steadily climbing upward, have experienced a reaction and there has been a decline in Greece. Consequently the price locally is slightly lower. Jobbers are asking 6½c. to 7c. in barrels. Reports from Denia state that Valencia raisins have again advanced. This stock now shows a cost here of 9c. for 4-crown layers. In California raisins have gone up ¼c. also, and from present indications there will be a still further advance. On dates, it is expected that prices will be made at any time now, as the steamer has left Bussorah. The probable date of arrival will be given out at the same time. The first lot of new figs, being the first new fruit to arrive, has reached this market, but owing to the advance in Smyrna prices this week are 1c. higher than latest quotations. Advices from California state that there has been no improvement in the situation there. Labor troubles are still causing anxiety, while supplies continue difficult to obtain. Prunes have been put up ¼c. Reports from France regarding the new crop of walnuts are not favorable. The crop has been damaged, but to what extent is not yet known. Offerings of the new are small. Filberts are higher, 10½c. being asked, while other nuts are upward in tendency, as regards prices.

Farmers are busy in the fields and cannot take time during the fine weather to make deliveries, so that the trade have, perforce, to wait. ONTARIO MARKETS.

ABBREVIATIONS—

Tomato situation.

Evaporated apples 7½c.

New Valencias going out.

Provision market firm.

Toronto, October 4, 1906.

Trade is good without much variation in prices. Sugar is firm; dried fruit, with the exception of currants, is firm or higher on the primary markets. Canned goods are the subject of discussion and some speculation. The question is, are they going higher? The canners are very bullish and interviews are appearing in the press in which $1.50 tomatoes are talked of. Naturally the canners would like to see it. Among the jobbers the statement is current that the canners will fill only 75 per cent. of their orders. That does look like a shortage.

The fact is the size of the pack depends more on the weather than the abundance of the crop. If the frost keeps away and the canners keep on till say the end of October, the pack will undoubtedly be a large one. If they were stopped now, none but the canners would know what the pack was. The crop has been large, but extremely hot weather when it was at its height brought the tomatoes on very rapidly, so that the canners had many more than they could handle. This hot weather doubtless lessened the pack. To make things worse there was a shortage of cans, and labor and material have cost more this year. Even if the pack were as large as last year there would not be enough to go round because of the heavy increase in consumption in the west especially, but in the east too, to some extent. There is the export business also to be taken care of.

A correspondent in Hamilton writes this week:

"I was speaking to a tomato grower across the bay, on what they call the Plains Road, which is the hub of the tomato business. He says: 'The tomatoes are pretty well over now. There are not going to be a great many more except of poor quality. He also states positively that it must have been impossible for the canners to get anything like the quantity of tomatoes they wanted. That they were scouring the whole country for tomatoes every day. At times of course, he said, they had more tomatoes sent in than they could can, but that did not alter the situation as to a short tomato pack."

If one knew for sure what the market was going to do he could get rich. If this weather continues throughout October the situation may be considerably changed.

CANNED GOODS — Prices are unchanged. Aside from the price of tomatoes, dealt with above, there is nothing unusual.

SUGAR—The course of European beet recently, f.o.b. Hamburg, has been: Sept. 25, 9s. 8¼d.; Sept. 26, 9s. 9d.; Sept. 27, 9s. 8¼d.; Sept. 28, 9s. 8½d.; Sept. 29, 10s.; Oct. 2, 9s. 7¼d.; Oct. 3, 9s. 10½d. The highest reached was 10s. 3d. The very marked advance was partly due to the Cuban situation and partly to the heavy buying of American refiners. For the present at least the Cuban matter has been settled by the resumption of authority by the United States representative, Gov. Taft. The prices of cane sugars have been retained fairly firm at 4 1-16 duty paid New York for 96 degrees centrifugals, and there were buyers yesterday at 4c., but no sellers. For the immediate future the statistical position of cane favors the attitude of sellers and it does not appear likely that we shall see any marked decline. Combined stocks in United States and Cuba are about 125,000 tons less than at the corresponding period last year and for weeks past the United States consumption has been about 20,000 tons per week in excess of receipts, which of course has meant a shrinkage in stocks at the four ports to that extent. It looks as if the upward movement of raw sugar were checked for the moment, as American refiners' recent heavy purchase of both beet and cane sugars will be coming to hand, which will tend to make them indifferent to offers, while on the other hand there appears no necessity of forcing sales with stocks of cane sugars so abnormally low and with new crops still some distance off.

Willett & Gray say the new Cuban crop must be late and the amount will be considerably reduced from last year's, and continue: "Just how much, whether great or small, remains to be seen as circumstances develop from week to week. Under these conditions, and with the latest reports from the beet sugar crops of Europe, which will be considerably less than last year, it is quite evident that raw sugar is on a comparatively low basis. This is as much as we can say at this time regarding the sugar situation, and it seems extremely advisable to keep in close touch with the changing conditions from day to day."

A recent cable from Europe indicates weather favorable for the growing crop of beet with saccarine substance poorer than last year. The immediate future of the market seems shrouded in uncertainty. There are no special indications either way and it is expected that prices of refined will be firmly maintained.

TEA—Prices are considerably stronger. A broker stated yesterday that teas had sold at auction in London for a penny more than they had recently been offered c.i.f. in Toronto. Ceylons continue to improve in quality and the tone of the market is stronger. Common tea has not in ten years been as low in London at this season of the year as it was last month. This was partly due to very heavy receipts of Indians.

COFFEE—Brazil's valorization scheme has been financed to the extent of $20,000,000 and the Government of the southern republic will buy 2,000,000 bags and hold them a year. It is also asserted that the next crop will be small because the flowering of the trees has been greatly interfered with by a long drought. Besides, stocks in Europe and America are said to be greatly depleted and in the speculative market there is a very heavy short interest. All these things tend to higher prices.

DRIED FRUITS—New crop Valencias arrived in the city Wednesday and Warren Bros. lay claim to the credit for shipping them out first. There has been a further advance of 5s. in Spain. The week has seen also an advance of 4s. to 5s. in Sultanas on the primary market. That crop, too, is very short. Currants turned back a little this week, but the price locally is unaffected. New peels are now quoted.

RICE AND TAPIOCA—Tapioca maintains its strong position in the world's markets. Purchases made some time ago for June, July and August shipment are now coming to hand and will relieve the stringency to some extent, but there appears no tendency to shade prices as the consumption of the article has not diminished to any serious extent, and in New York, where there have been fair arrivals from Singapore, the article appears to go into consumption about as fast as it arrives, and those who are best informed in that market look for a continuance of the present level of prices.

SEEDS—The situation is unchanged from last week. The market remains very quiet owing to the fact that there is no export demand. Prices here are about 50c. higher than in United States and Germany and they must come down that much if an export trade is to be done. That will depend on the quantity of the crop, which is as yet unknown. Quotations per bushel for Alsike clover are: Fancy, $6.50; No. 1, $6; No. 2, $5.75; No. 3, $4.35 to $4.65. Very little red clover is moving yet and the market is hardly established. The same is true of timothy. Prices will be quoted next week.

John Sloan, head of the firm of John Sloan & Co., Toronto, is confined to his home through illness.

NOVA SCOTIANS GOING WEST

Halifax Grocers Have the Fever—Dominion Exhibition at the Gateway to the Atlantic—Markets are Steady and Prices Firm.

Halifax, N.S., October 2.

The retail grocery business in this city during the past week was quite brisk, being caused by the large influx of visitors to the exhibition. It is estimated that fully fifteen thousand people came to the city to take in the fair, and the butcher, the baker, the grocer and the milkman reaped the benefit, as all these people remained in the city for a day or two and all had to be fed.

There is nothing at all doing at outside points, and very few orders are being received at present. Many of the travelers are now off the road, and are in the city meeting their customers who are visiting the fair. Prices are unchanged. The market throughout is steady and no immediate changes are looked for.

BEEF AND POULTRY—Poultry is coming in more freely, but the price for good stock is very high. Chickens are quoted at 90c. and $1, and turkeys at 22c. per pound. Ducks are worth from $1 to $1.25. These prices are considered to be excessively high. Beef per quarter is quoted at 8c. to 8½c. and pork 9c.

BUTTER—The price of butter here is very high, and there is a good demand for first-class stock. Dealers say that there is no profit in handling butter at the present high prices. Prints sold at the factories for 25c. are quoted at 26c., so that it will be seen that their margin of profit is very small. Small tubs are very scarce, in fact the receipts of all butter are very light. Creamery prints are quoted at 26c., and dairy tubs from 23c. to 25c. The margin of profit to the jobber is very small even at these prices as the factories are asking 25c. for creamery prints. Cheese is firm at 13c. and an early advance is looked for. The receipts of eggs are very limited just at present, Nova Scotia being quoted at 22c. and Prince Edward Island at 20c. The quality of the latter is improving.

Several Halifax grocers are preparing to leave for the west. Alderman W. H. Cawsey, with his family and brother, Dr. Howard Cawsey, a veterinary surgeon, will leave Halifax shortly. The alderman, who is president of the Halifax Grocers' Guild, conducts quite a large grocery and provision business at the north end of the city, and appeared to be prosperous, but he has decided to try his luck in a new field. The alderman is going out west to locate first, and will then return for his family.

J. L. Archibald has already disposed of his grocery business to Frederick Clarke, and with his family will leave this month for Saskatoon, where with his son he intends to engage in the real estate business.

Frank Dwyer and his brother, of the staff of John Tobin, wholesale grocers, are also going west, and will probably engage in ranching. They are brothers of Michael Dwyer, owner of the business of John Tobin & Co., which firm is one of the largest and most prosperous in the province.

PROVISION SITUATION.

The provision situation is an interesting one just now. Some of the packers say there is an actual scarcity of hog products for both domestic and export trade. This is the time of year when stocks are usually lowest. The packers expect a decline in prices and get ready for it. The abnormal shortage of hogs for months has left stocks even smaller than usual and it is asserted, too, that the domestic demand is holding up remarkably well. This is probably due to the high prices of other food products. The needs of the lumber trade and the approaching close of navigation also create a demand which, probably owing to the contracted supplies of hogs, the packers are not very well prepared to meet.

Hogs that go to the factories next week destined for export will appear on the English market about the 1st of December, the opening of the holiday trade when people turn from staples to what might be termed holiday goods. This is always an anxious time for the packer. Prices in Great Britain have been on an even keel for some weeks but it is a losing level for the Canadian packer. If a decided decline comes with the holiday season the export business will be very emphatically unprofitable. Usually the situation is met by turning more hogs to the domestic trade and putting the product in pickle for future use.

NEW LINE OF CODFISH.

Harry T. Graham has been in Toronto this week introducing a new line of boneless and shredded codfish put up by the Halifax Fish Co., a new company in the Atlantic capital. They appear to have grasped success at the start, for their product was awarded the gold medal at the recent Dominion Exhibition, when their plant had been in operation only three weeks.

They put up in one, two and three-lb. wooden boxes with sliding covers, and present it upon its quality and the hygenic advantages of such a package. The increase in the consumption of deep sea fish has been a marked feature of the Ontario trade in the last few years.

Anderson, Powis & Co. will be the Toronto selling agents for the company.

BIG GROCERY WAREHOUSE.

Kelly, Douglas & Co., wholesale grocers, Vancouver, B.C., have just put into their new stores a carload of Cow Brand soda. The sale for this well advertised and selling brand of baking soda is bounding upward and onward not only in Eastern Canada but as far as the Pacific ports. Kelly, Douglas & Co. have lately completed their new warehouse and those who know say that it is the largest wholesale grocery building in Canada. The dimensions are 125 feet frontage by 120 feet depth with nine floors and basement—certainly an indication that things "do be movin'" out west.

TO INVESTIGATE SUGAR TRUST.

Methods Adopted to Keep Big Refining Plant Idle.

In Philadelphia there is a great sugar refinery, said to be one of the finest of its kind in existence, and it has never turned a wheel. It was erected by the Pennsylvania Sugar Refinery Co. some years ago. Geo. H. Earle, receiver of the Real Estate Trust Co., of Philadelphia, has made charges against the sugar trust in regard to the methods by which it has kept this big refinery closed. The trust secured 51 per cent. of the stock. President Roosevelt has placed the evidence in the hands of U. S. Attorney-General Moody and instructed him to investigate.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN.

The present cheese situation is a paradox. There is a general report of a large shrinkage in milk, yet the receipts of cheese have been actually increasing lately. The demand from Great Britain is very light, but shipments are very heavy and prices, which were said to be declining a few days ago, are actually a fraction higher.

Late cable advices report a considerable increase in stocks in Great Britain, especially in London, yet, as will be seen from figures given below, the shipments have been unusually large for last week, the only solution to be found for this seems to be that September cheese were largely sold "short" and these contracts must now be filled.

Undoubtedly these contracts were made at lower prices than current cost. The shippers will therefore lose money and the importers in Great Britain, getting reasonably cheap goods, are selling them below present c.i.f. quotations, which makes a very awkward market for the legitimate order trade to work on.

Recent country markets have fully demonstrated the fact that it is impossible to break prices. There is a demand for the goods, somebody has to buy, and under the keen competition prices are kept up to a high level.

Before going any further in this argument we will give the latest statistical figures as follows, viz :

Receipts in Montreal last week were 96,361 boxes of cheese and 20,609 packages of butter, against 84,380 boxes of cheese and 21,037 packages of butter for the same week of last year, or a total since May 1 of 1,802,503 boxes of cheese and 521,296 packages of butter, as compared with 1,744,986 boxes of cheese and 635,134 packages of butter for the corresponding period of last year.

Our exports were last week 119,678 boxes of cheese and 23,626 packages of butter, against 93,122 boxes of cheese and 29,016 packages of butter for the same week of last year, or a total since May 1 of 1,681,402 boxes of cheese and 326,930 packages of butter, as compared with 1,525,116 boxes of cheese and 489,481 packages of butter for the corresponding period of last year.

Receipts of cheese show an increase over last year of 57,517 boxes and the shipments show an increase of 156,286 boxes, leaving the stocks in Montreal 98,769 boxes less than at the same time last year ; in butter we find a decrease in receipts of 113,838 packages and a decrease in shipments of 162,551 packages, which would naturally mean an increase in our stocks in Montreal of 48,713 packages.

We have pointed out before that our Board of Trade figures for receipts are, or have been, notoriously incorrect. Strong efforts by the members of the Montreal Produce Merchants' Association have been made to get these figures more accurate and it is believed that this year's receipts are more correct than in previous years.

If this be really so, we may safely say that our stocks of cheese in Montreal are fully 125,000 boxes less than last year. Against this we have the higher prices and larger visible stocks in British markets, which makes it extremely doubtful whether it will pay to carry cheese at present prices into next Winter, when carrying charges are taken into due consideration.

During the Winter months the markets in Great Britain are largely influenced by Australian and New Zealand supplies, but, after all, the situation seems safe, as the English make has also been diminished by hot and dry weather conditions this year, and there is reported to be a large demand for milk, which will undoubtedly further affect the production of cheese.

In spite of the apparent increase in the stocks of butter in Montreal of 48,713 packages, there seems to be very little cold-stored creamery on our market. Whether this be due to an increased local consumption or not, is difficult to say, but it seems probable that more western dairy butter was brought in this year, and it is possible that the accumulation of butter is more in this class than in creamery. At any rate, prices for finest creamery butter show an advancing tendency.

OUR LONDON LETTER.

September 22, 1906.

During the past few days there has been a very fair amount of activity on the London cheese market, the demand being in no way hindered by the high prices ruling. In fact, there is a feeling prevalent that prices must go yet higher and consequently there is some eagerness to purchase in advance. This being the case, sellers are naturally assuming a firm attitude, and are showing no signs of selling easy ; c.i.f. prices are so high, however, that transactions do not leave a very large margin of profit for them, and with the great chances of Canadian sellers insisting upon yet higher prices one must expect to see some stiff bargaining later on. Cable quotations to-day stand at from 63s. 6d. to 66s. c.i.f., at which prices fair business has passed. Spot prices stand at 62s. and 63s. for finest white and colored, with 60s. and 61s. for secondary grades. September make realizes about 2s. more, while for the October make sellers are demanding as much as 68s. If retailers are going to make any money at all on cheese, they will have to put a penny or so more upon the pound. There is no reason why this should not be done, for consumers could easily stand an increase of this sort. With the continued fear of tinned meats, they have not hesitated to respond to the high prices prevailing, and retailers have experienced quite an awakening in their cheese department at most unexpected moments. The coloring of Canadian cheese, however, is not uniformly satisfactory, and this matter should be more carefully attended to. Many men in the trade here would like to have a little deeper insight into the methods of coloring employed by the cheese factories in Canada.

The market for butter is firm all round, and sellers have the upper hand all the time. The Copenhagen official quotation has been advanced a further 2 kroner, making a total of 108 kroner at present. The demand for Canadian butter has been very good, and prices are ranging high. This in spite of the fact that quality could be better by a good deal in many cases. That trouble, which has now continued for several seasons, of splinters in the boxes is still noticeable. Often, when Canadian butter is being examined, numerous particles of wood are found embedded in the butter, and good money has often been lost to sellers through this.

Very small quantities of Canadian bacon are on sale, but such as there are move well at prices ranging from 65 to 60 shillings.

BACON HOG IN QUEBEC.

What is Being Done to Increase it—Auctions—How it Pays.

The hog rearing industry has made rapid strides in the Province of Quebec during the past year. Not only are brood sows being kept in constantly increasing numbers, but these are being largely confined to the class of stock suitable for the production of export bacon. The series of fall fairs which is nearing completion has given strong evidence of this tendency, inasmuch as the exhibits of Yorkshires and Tamworths far exceed all other breeds, and where Chester Whites were shown they were almost invariably of the lengthy, smooth-shouldered, deep-sided kind.

The campaign in the interest of the bacon hog that has been carried on through farmers' institutes and other meetings conducted by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa during the year, together with the distribution of improved swine of the bacon breeds at auction sales last Spring, have all tended to stir up the farmers to the possibilities of the industry. The high price of hogs that has prevailed during the season has further encouraged an increased production, while the bonus paid by the packers for animals of superior bacon type has created a lively demand for the foundation stock of the long, smooth-shouldered, thrifty class. order to assist farmers of the province in getting brood sows and boars of desirable quality at reasonable cost, a generous distribution of Yorkshires and Tamworths has been arranged to take place within the province at an early date. To this end, auction sales will be held at Ormstown, Farnham, Waterloo and St. Jerome, on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday, respectively, of the week commencing October 15. This undertaking is being carried out by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, assisted by the Department of Agriculture at Quebec and pork packing companies of Montreal.

It might be pointed out that the bacon hog is the more profitable, not alone because it is more valuable on the market, but also because it is more cheaply raised. It has been demonstrated over and over again that the sows of the lengthy fleshy class are the most prolific and best milking mothers and that their offspring are economically reared. Large litters are the rule, and with fair treatment a majority of the offspring are raised. Apart from all this, the system of rearing bacon hogs, that of pasturing, soiling and liberal exercise, affords a maximum of thrift and therefore of economical gains.

PROVISION AND DAIRY MARKETS.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS—A fair jobbing trade is being done at unchanged prices. Hams and bacon are moving out fairly well, while the demand for lard, both pure and compound, has been good.

BUTTER—In butter the market is again firmer, with higher prices paid at country points. Export demand has not been very brisk, but stocks are not heavy, and buyers among the home trade are making purchases more freely. This is the strong feature of the situation, and may be the cause of higher prices this month, since it will be necessary for the local trade to stock for the Winter. For the balance of the season, prices are more likely to be higher than lower.

CHEESE—Cheese is quiet after the heavy buying of two weeks ago. Demand from the Old Country is slow, buyers not caring to make any offers at the present high prices. The general opinion is that prices for September make will show little alteration, but as the season progresses and the quality deteriorates, prices should become a little easier. Stocks are not excessive, and all obtainable is sure to be wanted before the new make arrives next Spring. Shipments last week were very heavy, which may, to a certain extent account for the lack of inquiries from the other side this week.

EGGS—Eggs are higher this week, and receipts are lighter, which may account for the better figures. Selects bring as much as 22c., while No. 1's are sold from 18c. to 19c., more changing hands at the latter price than at the former. Straight gathered stock is offered at 18 1-2c. The present weather is favorable to holding the eggs in the country, and it is thought that perhaps this is what is being done. It is not thought that the coming week will see a very large increase in arrivals, but the opinion of the trade is that supplies will be better within the next couple of weeks.

HONEY—Honey continues very scarce and prices are inclined to advance. White clover, tins, is quoted 11c. this week.

N. B. MARKETS.

St. John, N.B, Oct. 1, 1906.

St. John merchants enter the last quarter of the present year with feelings of confidence; business in general has been good and the outlook is for a large Fall trade. Markets are firm; in many cases prices rule quite high, in some lines, particularly raisins and currants, the advance during the past few weeks having been very marked. Great interest is taken in Winter port matters. With the new, big Canadian Pacific steamers coming this season a larger business than ever is expected.

Rice is firmly held. Patna. of which the quantity used is small, but growing slowly, is rather higher.

In spice, which is an interesting line at this season, there are few changes. Pepper is fairly low; ginger and cloves are high: nutmegs are still chea . pimento and cassia firm; cream of tartar continues rather below the average price.

OIL— This is the busy season; not only is the consumptive demand growing, but shipments to outside points are being hurried forward, before the close of navigation. Paint oils are quiet. There is a steady sale for lubricating oils. Cod oil continues to come in quite freely, there is no change in price.

SALT—In Liverpool coarse salt here is a fair steady sale at even prices. Fair stocks are held. Fine salt in rather less demand.

GREEN FRUITS—Dealers are very busy. Apples have but a fair sale. Prices quite low. In early apples, New Brunswick stock freely offered (soft fruit). Oranges rather easier, but still high. Lemons very firmly held, but, with new fruit arriving shortly, lower prices expected. Ontario grapes are now being largely received. Prices rather lower. There are very few plums. Cape Cod cranberries, which are again on the market, are at about usual prices for this season. Bananas unchanged.

CANNED GOODS— With new corn and tomatoes quoted higher than usual, and pears well above last year market may be called very firm. Peaches and pears unchanged. Strawberries and apples firm at full figures. Salmon are firm. Meats have shown a small advance; sales not large.

OYSTERS—Oysters are scarce and higher. In domestic fish, market is largely unchanged. Finnan haddies and kippered herring in good supply. Sardines but a fair pack.

DRIED FRUIT—This is the line of interest. In California prunes our people bought quite freely. Market firm and prices higher. Large and small prunes both at a premium. Prices not yet up to the opening figures, but getting there. In California raisins our trade bought fair quantities, particularly seeded. There has been a continued and lately a sharp advance. Market tending higher. A few new Valencias due; prices will be high; very few, for later have been bought. No Malaga loose bought this year. In layers, a good business was done. Prices now higher. Shelled almonds will be high. Currants have shown a marked advance, spot and new goods. Peels are higher, particularly citron. Figs and dates, firm. New evaporated apples shortly expected; prices for latter are a little lower; values unchanged. In onions, while Valencias are offered, Canadian chiefly sold; while reports favor higher prices. sales are still made at low figures.

SUGAR—Market is very firm. The advance is very slow. Dealers continue to carry full stocks. Sales are good.

Small firm Vegetables, well cut, made crisp, delicious and appetizing by being pickled in our special Malt Pickling Vinegar.

We make the best bulk pickles in Canada, that is our reputation and we live up to it.

Grain Prices Higher—Business Not Very Active—Flour Steady—Change in the Point of View Owing to the Lower Yield of Spring Wheat.

A grain dealer was quoted in The Canadian Grocer recently as saying that the low point of the wheat market for this season had been passed. This seems to be becoming more apparent.

"The past week has not been prolific of any important changes in prices or any especial activity either in the speculative or the spot market, but a radical change in opinion has been forced upon the trade by the very disappointing yield of Spring wheat, especially on the American side of the line, leaving the prospect of very little of this grade of wheat for export, over domestic clients, except of the macaroni grade, while Manitoba offerings have almost ceased because of the reduced estimate of that crop and by the refusal of farmers to sell more at the late low prices," says the New York Journal of Commerce. "On the other hand, Europe has sent free buying orders for both these wheats and hard Winter and has been unable, day after day, to fill more than a fraction of them, and yet exporters have played with masterly inactivity their game of holding off, though they have ceased to look for the big movement of Spring and the lower prices they were waiting for. The foreign markets have observed the same apparent indifference, and have only been slightly affected by changed conditions here, as our speculations have mostly been short and prevented our option markets from going up materially in spite of these unquestionable facts and conditions."

Flour quotations are unchanged and oat and wheat products hold the prices given last week.

MONTREAL.

GRAIN—Oats is higher this week by 1c. Peas are also higher, 77 1-2c. being asked. Corn has fluctuated more or less but the figure asked remains without change. New crop wheat is beginning to arrive and local grain merchants are centring much of their attention upon it.

ELIMINATING UNFAIR COMPETITION.

An address by Grant W. Porter before the Illinois Retail Hardware Association

I don't believe that there is a man in this whole assembly with a perfect character, or that there is any one here but who at some time or another has transgressed or selfishly usurped the rights of others to a greater or less degree. However, it is not necessary to attain perfection to conceive it. Therefore I am speaking as one aggressor to another upon this subject of unfair competition, which, if modified or eliminated, will be beneficial to us all.

No doubt there are a great variety of opinions as to just what unfair and disastrous competition is. Some of us would define as "unfair" that which others would call shrewd business tactics; and certain business methods would be alternately commended and condemned by the number of this association. But it seems to me that the meat of the whole question, stripped of its technical coloring, is motive. Motive seems to be capable of modifying or intensely changing the effect, good or bad, of any act born out of it.

Good done with a purpose is much more beneficial and effective than a favor accidentally rendered, and an act committed through an evil purpose or motive is proportionately worse in its effect than the same act unintentionally done.

My conception of fair competition is that when business is obtained in a legitimate profit through the environment, social standing or business ability of the dealer or his representative. Therefore, I would define as unfair and disastrous to all parties concerned, any aggressive competition which does not get business at a profit, and also, profit or no profit, where business is obtained by defaming the character of your neighboring dealer. We are all in business for the same purpose or motive. And that purpose is just and beneficial not only to ourselves but incidentally to the community in which we live. Because institutions are necessary to the existence and welfare of any community; and a business institution which does not show a profit is transitory and unsafe, and an unsafe institution is a menace and an infection to the community in which it exists.

Profit Necessary.

Our trade expects to pay and we are entitled to receive a legitimate profit, and unless we can show at the end of each year a satisfactory increase in our assets, we become discouraged and sad, apprehensive of conditions even worse than at present, and unfit to cope with the ordinary obstructions which baffle us at every turn and determine to a large degree our final failure or success.

Now, if we believe we are entitled to a profit, we have a right and are bound to grant and demand that our neighbor have and maintain the same privilege. If he is entitled to a profit on his merchandise, we are morally bound not to deprive him of it by selling his customers their goods at cost, and he is morally obliged to reciprocate, to the mutual benefit of both.

Business obtained by giving the profit to your customer, because of trade jealousy, puts the dealer in much the same light as the dog with a bone in his mouth looking into the stream. He drops the bone and grabs for its shadow, and when too late realizes what his jealousy has cost him.

Which is the more businesslike proposition—to work hard and give your profits away, because you want to down your competitor; or, sell your goods at a profit and let your competitor have a share of the business? To me it is an acknowledgement of defeat and inferior business ability for a dealer to give his goods away to get business. Don't sell goods with a club; use your brains. Cultivate that experience and ability which enable a man to satisfy his customer and sell his goods at a profit at the same time.

When unfair competition exists there is only one remedy for abolishing it. You must organize the business methods and moral tendencies of dealers' increase.

Each must realize that the yoke which he has helped to place around his own neck is fastened to a load not worth the hauling. Each must be made to see that all he can do is to back up and pull his head out from behind—he never can get his body through—then leave his load in the mire, and forget about it. Pick up your original motive as a business man, the one which you so entirely forgot in your desire to inflict an injury on your fellow dealers, and carry it to the end. The rank words of hate must be uprooted and the spot sterilized by common sense and fair-mindedness.

Local Associations.

The principal benefit to be derived from our local association is the sterilized effect it has upon this rank growth. But, gentlemen, if you keep fertilizing at the same time, you can never kill it off. Don't think that because you joined the association that you are converted. Don't think that because you can grasp in friendship the hand of a dealer miles from you—a dealer whom you never knew as a competitor—that you are out of the rut. No, sir! Not until you can walk into your competitor's store across the street with a "Good morning, John," and mean it.

Mere membership in our association means nothing unless we are men enough to bury our differences. Each must make up his mind to do something and to lay upon the sacrificial altar some of his selfishness. Usually it costs a man something, in dollars and cents, or nervous energy, to do the right thing; but here is a proposition that usually pays a man in coin to be fair, and it costs him money to be unfair.

Every year millions of dollars in profits are strewn broadcast by business men because they desire to be unfair to their competitors. Are we so desirous for the enmity of our fellow-dealers that we are willing to pay for it? Are we to continue to sell goods through malice or are we going to sell for a legitimate profit?

Free Trade With a Vengeance.

The other day a customer came to my store and said to me: "Mr. Porter, I have a furnace to be repaired, out of your district, so I am going to do the work myself; But I want you to give me an order downtown, so that I can buy the repairs that I need at your price." I said, "Do you think that would be fair? What do you suppose I I would think of a dealer on the north side who would grant what you ask, to fix a furnace in my locality? Do you suppose, if I knew it, I would have the same regard for his welfare as before? I am sorry that you ask it, and I must absolutely refuse."

That would be free trade with a vengeance. If a man steals a purse from the pocket of another and gives it to a friend, does that mitigate the theft? If we deprive our competitor of his profit simply to make a sale, we are moral robbers. I have just one new thought and can embody it in three lines — the great commercial trinity:

Justice to our customer.
Justice to our competitor.
Justice to our firm.

FRUITS, VEGETABLES AND FISH

Peach Season Drawing to a Close—Imported Fruit—Oysters Likely to be Higher This Season Owing to Failure of Crop in Chesapeak Bay.

The peach season is past the interesting stage, though good late varieties are still arriving. Grapes have attained their sweetness and in Ontario are coming on the market in large quantities, Niagaras, Concords and Rogers. There is reported to be a large crop, largely because growers have found the commercial advantage of spraying the vines. Prices are slightly easier than a year ago. Prices on peaches this season were a little higher than last year despite the big crop. This was probably due to the heavy demand for preserving on account of the shortage of small fruits.

The foreign fruit season is beginning. Florida oranges are added this week. Cranberries are coming pretty plentifully. These are expected to be higher as the growers have arranged their differences.

Oysters are now in fair demand. The Chesapeake Bay crop is reported a failure this year and it is expected prices will range higher this season on that account. In Chesapeake Bay natural increase is depended upon and this year it seems to have failed. An advice to White & Co. from Baltimore states that on account of the shortage 10,000 shuckers, women and boys who open the shells, will be out of employment in that city this Winter. In Long Island Sound, where the oyster beds are cultivated and harvested in rotation, the crop is satisfactory.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

GREEN FRUITS—Dealers report a slight falling off in business, but there is still good trade passing. Prices show considerable changes this week, being easier in some instances, but higher in other cases. The late fruit is now arriving in good quantities and the dealers are thus kept more or less busy. Apple shipments to the other side have commenced to be of some size and present trade augurs well for the future. Oranges are easier this week, as are also cranberries. Receipts of the latter are heavier. Lemons have been advanced.

VEGETABLES—Vegetable trade is fairly good, local merchants buying more or less well. Purchases are mostly for actual need. Dealers are commencing to do a fair shipping business to local points on the river route. There are no startling changes on the list this week. Tomatoes are higher. FISH—The feature of the market this week is the arrival of the new oysters, which are quoted in the list of prices hereunder. Standards opened at $1.40, while selects are quoted at $1.60. Malpeques opened up at $7 to $9. In fish, fresh cod and haddock are this week more plentiful, as is also lake trout. Supplies of whitefish are limited. Fresh fish prices are rather low this week. Yarmouth and St. John bloaters are now quoted. New kippered herring and fresh cured haddies are in good supply. Dealers report a noticeable increase in orders.

ALL BEAT THE DUTCH.

The British customs took 1,875 samples of imported butter last year, the consignments coming from 14 countries, and the London Commercial Intelligence states it as remarkable that, except for one "doubtful" sample from the United States, Holland provided all the bad and doubtful shipments. All the adulterated consignments, 71 in number, were of Dutch origin, and the commissioners expressed a regret that the penalties imposed in the prosecutions which followed were on several occasions insignificant

GREAT WEST DEVELOPING.

Returning Montreal Manufacturer Speaks of Progress.

S. W. Ewing, of S. H. Ewing & Sons, and who is chairman of the Manufacturing grocers' section of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, arrived home this week after accompanying the C.M.A. excursion as far as Winnipeg and attending the meetings held in that city. In an interview with The Grocer representative yesterday, Mr. Ewing expressed himself highly satisfied with the trip and the results of the meetings held. A lot of very important work was gone through with by the various committees and the grocers' section accomplished good work and laid out extensive plans for the future. Mr. Ewing speaks most highly of the manner in which the city of Winnipeg, through its mayor and other officials, as well as the merchants generally, entertained the delegates to the convention. His surprise at the growth of Winnipeg since his last visit, four years ago, was great, and can only be expressed in the word "marvelous." Sections of the city visited by him four years ago, and which seemed in those days practically outside of the outskirts, were now practically centrally located—to such an extent has the city spread out and developed. A feature that struck Mr. Ewing was the fact that the manufacturing industries were still in their infancy, but he anticipated that with the energy and progress of the citizens it would not be many years before, as was the case with Chicago and St. Louis, eastern houses and firms would open up manufactories in the western metropolis.

Fort William and Port Arthur, in both of which places Mr. Ewing spent a few days, impressed him very much and in his opinion and that of others who have studied the situation closely, these ports are particularly well adapted for manufacturing purposes, being amply supplied with magnificent water power. A great advantage for manufacturers located in these points is the fact that raw material can be laid down much more cheaply than in Winnipeg and other western centres; and as it is the cost of the raw material that is a big factor in the proper and profitable turning out of goods, it will be to the interest of those contemplating manufacturing to consider these ports.

It was with much regret that Mr. Ewing's business requirements prevented him from accompanying the touring manufacturers over the entire field laid out by the executive, but his enthusiasm is none the less strong.

WITH THE TRADE IN LONDON.

Traveler Starts for Himself—Grocers' Association.

London, October 2.

The retail grocery trade in London has been good during the past week and all report improving business. The wholesale business has also been brisk.

A change is taking place in one wholesale grocery that will be of interest to the trade. Frank Layman, who has been traveling through Perth, Bruce and the northern counties for Masuret & Co., has resigned to go into business for himself. He has purchased the grocery business of D. M. McLeod, of Parkhill, His place on the staff at Masuret's is being taken by John McPetrie, formerly with Mooney's, of Stratford.

The Retail Grocers' Association will shortly resume their meetings. Recently they appointed Mr. Hays, son of the grocer on Adelaide street of this city, as secretary, and an active canvass will be made to keep the bad debts list up-to-date. The members of the association expect to more than save the amount that it will cost them to keep the secretary.

GOOD APPLE CROP.

Dominion Fruit Inspector Gifford, at Goderich. Ont., states that the apple crop of Western Ontario is a good one this year, as to quantity and the quality is much better than last year, particularly where spraying was done. 35 to 40 per cent. will grade No. 1, and probably 40 per cent. No. 2. The Georgian Bay country produced the finest fruit Mr. Gifford had seen, fully 40 per cent. grading No. 1 there. The apples have not colored up this year as quickly as usual, but the cold weather now will do much to remedy that.

The Acadia Sugar Refining Co. are doubling the capacity of the Moncton barrel factory. At present the capacity of the factory is about 1,000 barrels a day and about fifty hands are employed. The increasing demand for barrels by the Halifax refineries is the cause of enlarging the Moncton factory. In future the barrel wood required will be increased from 5,000 to 10,000 cords.

EFFECTIVE ADVERTISING

Some Maritime Advertising—A Fort William Sample—Advantages of an Ad Diary—Hints on Methods of Publicity.

FORSYTH, JR.

In The Canadian Grocer of June 23, 1905, the following reference was made to a circular of Forsyth, Jr., Dartmouth, N.S.

"The data in the ad is good and the conclusion well brought out, but the effect would have been better had the compositor used more taste."

The above paragrapn partly applies to a series of newspaper ads run by Forsyth, Jr., and sent in for review.

The purpose of the ads was to bring Wednesday bargain sales to the notice of the people.

Forsyth, Jr., opened up with "A Heart to Heart Talk," in which he gave reasons for the series of ads that were going to appear.

But some sentences are also to be found in the initial ad the suitability of which are open to question.

Is it the place of the retail grocer to talk like this: "Advertising is effective in keeping the merchants' goods before the prospective customer until he is in need of the goods or thinks he is, which amounts to the same thing."

Should a customer be led to believe that sometimes he buys goods on illusion? Is that the kind of argument to preface bargain items with?

Forsyth, Jr., should have made his heart to heart talk more relative to particular selling and less relative to advertising generalizations.

Some of the headings are creditable—for instance "The Longest Pole Knocks Down the Most Apples; the Shortest Prices and Best Service gets the Business." While the comparison is not altogether complete, still it suggests something in the reader's mind. The other headings are more commonplace. For the size of space he uses Forsyth, Jr., could get far better display results.

In the first place there might be more uniformity of headings and a smaller size of display type employed in the majority of instances.

Then, instead of breaking the matter up with various sized rules without regard to symmetry, the items could be set two-columns wide, the first and fifth columns being used for side headings and numbers, and the fourth column for any special note which might be set in single column as a contrast.

In this way, just about as much news could be got in the ad as there is at present, whereas it would be 25 per cent. easier to find and the numbers at the side would assist the reader in making notes.

WADDELL'S GROCERY.

The ad reproduced on this page was clipped from the Fort William Times-Journal.

For a 45-line space the ad says a good deal. The point that stands out particularly strong is the appeal to the reader in reference to the make up of Saturday's order.

A few years ago a grocer would never think of getting down to the fine points of retailing as Waddell has done, but grocers must do so to-day.

AN AD DIARY.

There are times in the life of every advertising man when he would cheerfully and gladly pay over his next week's salary for the very dear privilege of laying his hands on a certain document, upon a certain advertisement or upon a special idea that came into his head and slipped away in a twinkling.

Schemes of a hundred varieties have been devised to help a man out of just such a predicament. Many a man saves a lot of valuable material which immediately amounts to just so much junk because it is improperly filed. However, I am not going to tell you about a new scheme for filing. Every man must work out his own filing scheme to suit his own ideas of order or disorder.

Good ideas pop in and pop out as quickly as they come. How to get hold of these ideas when you want them, how to get hold of suggestions for borders, arguments for a holiday, special schemes for special departments and above all how to advertise the right thing at the right time without wasting hours of time hunting for material, was the thing that bothered me. I let it worry me for a couple or three years, but finally I mastered it and it was such a good stunt that I cannot help but think that it will benefit many others who are in the position that I was.

A few years ago an advertising solicitor handed me a copy of a large diary gotten out by one of the big papers. It was a last year's diary and to him or anyone else was about as useful as a last year's bird's nest. It had a pretty cover on it, however, and it struck me that some time it might be useful. I did my best to throw it away time after time, but it seemed to hang around as if it wanted to make itself useful. One day when I was hard pressed for copy, when the world seemed upside down, when the hard-hearted man who pays my weekly salary got mighty unpleasant and personal because I did not sometimes advertise the things that women most wanted to buy at that particular time (I laid it to the head of the particular department about which he complained and it worked all right), I got to thinking, and all of a sudden it came to me that it would be a good scheme to use that diary.

Now I have always had a horror of diaries. Up to that time, as far as I was concerned, they were invented only to keep for the first few days of the year and forget for the rest, but it helped me a great deal, not so much for the first year, but the second year it was immensely valuable and I would not sell my original copy for a great deal of money. With it I am doing better work than I could possibly hope to do without it. I use it every day. I do not try to get a new one each year, but I keep on using the old one year after year and I would not think of getting along without it.

The methodical, detail-loving advertising man will have no difficulty to keep the thing going and to make it valuable, but who ever saw a methodical, detail-loving advertising man. It is not a difficult thing to start, if you once get the idea into your head that you really want it. Get a nice big diary about as big as an ordinary book. Don't try to go too far back. Simply take each day as it comes along and put down the things that you believe will be helpful to you the next year when you are preparing an advertisement.

The advertising man who tries to carry around a lot of detail in his head is not going to do the best work. The human brain is only capable of carrying about so much. Its capacity is limited and no man can afford to carry in his mind something for next year's border or a suggestion for the first of July advertisement that is to come.

My experience is that good ideas come, not when you can use them, but at the wrong time. Now, through this book I capture them and they are mine for good and always. I place them where they will be useful and where I can find them, as in our sales book when there is the greatest demand for an article. Don't try to begin a year back; begin to-day. Record your errors of omission. Afterthoughts are not as forethoughts, but they are far more

BREVITY AND TRUTH.

Brevity, we are told, is the spice of life. Brevity in advertising does not mean that the adv. itself should be short or small, but that the sentences in it should be terse and to the point, stripped of unnecessary verbiage. It means just as much to say: "The New Crop. Sound, ripe and of fine flavor. Buy some to-day." as it does to say it thus: "These apples are of the 1905 crop. They are guaranteed sound, are fully ripe, and have a fine flavor. Hadn't you better buy a few of them to-day?" Busy people want to read the ads as they get their lunch—bolt it, gulp it down, and get back to business.

The short, terse, to-the-point language of the street, the shop and the car is the kind to be used in advertising. Say enough, however, to accurately describe your goods, but so choose your words that the fewest possible number will give the fullest possible description.

I hate to have to say anything about truthfulness in advertising, but it is a fact that there are thousands of advs. that don't tell the truth.

Even reputable business men who would scorn to tell an untruth with the tongue, nevertheless tell a great many falsehoods in their advertising, or permit it to be done by their advertisement writers.

If your stock of goods is medium-sized or small, and plenty of other dealers in town carry larger stocks than you do, it is not only an idle assertion, but a harmful untruth when you say, "We have positively the largest stock of these goods in Blankville."

Now everybody knows that Smith Bros. have twice as large a store and twice as many goods as you have, and people will probably laugh at your claims.

Another error that is often committed is the advertising of goods "at cost" or "below cost." People know that you are not going to sell goods that way—that you can't sell 'em that way and stay in business. "At cost" is a very vague, meaningless expression. It is nothing to the customer what the goods cost you, but what are they going to cost him? That's the question. Far better to give the actual figures at which you expect to sell the goods than to say "at cost" or "at a saving of 25 per cent."—Advertising World.

ENGLISH AGENCIES.

Green & Co., who some months ago began business in Toronto as manufacturers' agents, specializing on English goods, have recently taken quarters at 25 Front street, east, where they are preparing to enter upon an energetic campaign with a number of English specialties, for which they have secured the agency.

Among the firms they represent are Thorne & Co's health cocoa, Leeds; Branson's coffee extract, London, S. W.; Rayner & Co., lime juice, cordials, extracts, etc.; E. E. & W. Anstie, Limited, tobacco, particularly shags and navy cuts, Devizes, Wilts.

FOOD FROM THE STRAITS.

Tapioca, Sago, Cloves, Nutmegs, Peppers Pineapples.

The Straits Settlements are the principal source of the world's supply of tapioca and it is interesting to note that the exports during the first half of 1906 fell off several thousand tons. The exact figures are: 1905, 24,173 tons; 1906, 21,574 tons. England is by far the largest purchaser, though curiously enough the exports to England fell off and those to the United States increased; here are the figures: 1905, England 12,872 tons, United States 5,668; 1906, England 10,562 tons, United States 6,481 tons. The purchases of the rest of Europe also fell off, being 5,633 tons in 1905 and 4,504 tons in 1906.

The figures showing the exports of some other food stuffs are not uninteresting:

Cloves—1905, England 21 tons, United States 25 tons; 1906, England 65 tons, United States 126 tons.

Nutmegs—1905, England 58 tons, United States 209 tons; 1906, England 115 tons, United States 283 tons.

Sago—1905, England 13,302 tons,

A JAPANESE VISITOR.

Says Present Price of Japan Tea is Just About Right.

A visitor to Montreal this week was N. Nakomura, a member of one of the largest tea firing firms in Japan. Of the situation in Japan teas this year Mr. Nakamura had to say: "In Japan the present prices asked for our teas are regarded as being just about right. Native growers and merchants consider it normal. Last year the price was exceptionally low, and there was no profit for any one engaged in the tea business. This year, however, conditions are different, and if the present prices are maintained, I think all will be well in the future. Although the crop this year was a short one, and export to Canada and the United States was consequently smaller than in previous years, yet this season the teas exported were even smaller in quantity. There are two reasons for this. One of them is that the demand from the interior of Japan for medium grade teas, although high grade are used chiefly, is largely increased this year. Transportation facilities are just about complete on the island now, and it is easy to ship these teas to any point. The other reason for the limited export business is that more low grade teas than ever before were shipped to Manchuria and Russia. These two teas interest this market more than any other grades and of course with the demand from the interior of the country, prices went up, and conditions were more strained, particularly since the crop was short. The same applies to the lower grade teas, which were shipped to Russia and Manchuria." Mr. Nakamura said that the GOING AFTER FOREIGN TRADE.

Not a great many years since, while foreign firms were establishing branches in Canada, the Canadian concerns who were doing business outside the Dominion could be numbered almost on one's fingers. All this is materially changing and every day one hears of Canadian firms opening branches in all parts of the world.

One of the latest Canadian firms to do this is Business Systems Limited, of Toronto, who have recently opened up in the British Isles at 32 Cheapside, London, England. H. J. King, the general manager of this concern, went over to the Old Country some months ago, and spent considerable time investigating the opening in the British market for his goods. The result is the opening of a London office completely equipped with a strong selling force.

The progress made by Business Systems Limited, is especially noteworthy in view of the fact that although this concern has only been in existence one year, they are already so thoroughly organized as to be able to extend after foreign trade.

The English manager of Business Systems Limited will always be glad to welcome Canadian business men who are visiting in the Old Country. The London office is equipped with writing rooms and stenographers for the use of Canadian business men who are invited to make this their headquarters while in the Old Country and to have their mail addressed in care of Business Systems Limited, 32 Cheapside, London, E.C., England.

FREIGHTS AND CHARTERS

Getting Ready for the Fall Rush—Grain and Apple Business Picking Up—Little Butter Going Abroad—Provisions Also Slow.

Shippers report increased business in most export lines during the past week. It is the beginning of the annual Fall rush, and lines which are strong during the Fall export season, such as apples, are beginning to move out very freely.

Low water does not affect the trade so much now as formerly, although it is still a factor in the situation, restricting vessels more or less. The end of last week the water in the harbor was 26 feet 5 inches in depth.

There is not much being done in grain exportation as yet, but interest is being taken in the article. Demand from points in Europe has been getting larger every day during the past week. Shipping companies are making arrangements for a record season in grain once the new crop begins to move outward.

Hay shipments, while light, are improving. The market on the other side has been such as to make good export business impossible and this, with the fact that hay has been strongly held by the farmers on this side, has had the effect of keeping down trade with the Old Country.

Cheese has been going out in very good quantities, although the continued high prices have their effect on the demand from the other side. There is bound to be a considerable steady demand from England, however, because the article is regarded in the light of a staple and must be supplied.

In butter the effect of the high prices on the export trade is much more noticeable than in cheese. Very little trade as compared with last year, is being done. Climatic conditions on this side have had the effect of keeping the flow of milk low, and consequently sending up the price of butter.

Apples are gaining strength in an export way, every week. Some good large bookings have been made by shipping companies lately. Up to the end of last week the size of shipments was rather behind the corresponding period in 1905 but trade is increasing.

Provisions are rather slow than otherwise, although there is some trade with the United Kingdom.

The only change in rates this week is flour to Glasgow, which is now quoted 10s. 6d.

The Kildona, for London, with a general cargo, cleared Sept. 28.

Other boats getting away the same day were: Lake Erie and Southwark for Liverpool, and the Manchester Importer for Manchester. All carried general cargoes.

MOTORING IN MUSKOKA.

Wm. Dobie, of E. W. Gillett Co., Limited, has just returned from a two week's trip to Rosseau, Muskoka. Mr. Dobie made the trip in his auto and had some thrilling experiences with the roads beyond Orillia. The scenery, however, was ample compensation for the other discomforts. Mr. Dobie was accompanied by his brother, A. D. Dobie, of New York, who is just recovering from a dangerous illness. The Muskoka air has restored him to good health.

EMPIRE SALT CO.

Will Enlarge Their Works and Manufacture Dairy nd Table Salt.

The Empire Salt Co., of Sarnia, are now operating one of the most extensive and modern plants in this country. So far, however, they have confined their operations to manufacturing ordinary grades of salt. Having recently decided to also manufacture the various grades of dairy and table salt, work has been commenced on the erection of a substantial building for the purpose, immediately to the south of the present premises. The new building will be 48 x 64 feet, five storeys in height, and will be equipped with the most up-to-date machinery in order to produce table and dairy salt with a greater degree of excellence than has been heretofore attained.

As the addition to the company's works will have a daily capacity of about 200 barrels, employment will be given to a considerable number of men, boys and girls, which will be of material benefit to the town.

J. I. Carter, president of the company, states that this work will be completed about the first of January next and that during the coming Winter another salt well will be put down that ample brine may be obtainable for the increased output of salt.—Sarnia Canadian.

EDUCATION AND BUSINESS

Fair and Unfair Competition the Com mercial Question of the Hour—Result of the Greed for Gold—Speculation the Modern "Philosopher's Stone."

By J. R. Garfield, U. S. Commissioner of Corporations.

Education is the foundation of civilized society. It has well been called "the cornerstone of our republic." Education, which was in the beginning confined to a favored class, is now open to all, and the man who neglects the educational opportunities of his age puts himself out of the running in life's race. The need of education is not confined to the so-called "learned professions," it is equally important in trade, in commerce, in business, in manual labor. The man who day after day works with his hands, runs a machine, keeps books, sells over a counter, works in the bank, or manages a great business corporation becomes a mere drudge, a mere slave to work alone, unless he has by education had his mind opened wide to the thoughts and work of other men.

We must not forget the misery that the greed for gold has brought upon men and nations. The stupendous growth of our country during the last 25 years, the enormous increase of great fortunes in the hands of a few, started the fever of speculation among our people. Men have been crazy to grow rich over night. They have tried, like the seekers for the philosopher's stone of old, to make something from nothing. The result of all this has been the development of what may be termed a "commercial conscience"—a conscience that has chosen a different standard for business than for any other work of life; a conscience that has thrown aside all ideals other than the single one of money; a conscience that has sneered at old-fashioned, common honesty in trade; a conscience that has called trickery ability; a conscience teaching that all things—that all men—have their price, can be bought.

It is under the corporate form that most of the industrial evil of to-day has been done. The individual has hidden behind the corporation. The old-fashioned individual responsibility has been shifted to the responsibility of the corporation, which knows no individual. This law of personal responsibility is in great measure responsible for the growth of what I have referred to as "commercial conscience." Under the form of a corporation men have been willing to do, or cause to be done, that which they would not do as individuals. Behind the corporate form they have been able to conceal the evidence and record of acts for which, as individuals, they would have been, and should now be condemned. Through the corporation the control of great interests by the ownership of 51 per cent. of the stock has made men forget the minority stockholder and fail to realize that the directors of corporations are trustees for every stockholder, not merely for 51 per cent. of the stockholders.

Publicity in the affairs of corporations is resulting in accurate knowledge of conditions and has opened the way to great improvements. If men know that their business acts cannot be hidden from their associates they will see to it that nothing unfair, nothing dishonest be done. The leaders of business are not insensible to public opinion. A director of a bank would not use bank funds for personal gain if his act would be immediately known to the depositor. The railroad manager would not give rebates if he were unable to conceal them The manufacturer would not use unfair methods to destroy a competitor's trade, nor deceive the public as to the quantity and quality of his product if his actions would be known to the public.

One of the newer questions in business is the difference between fair and unfair competition. None more need the guide of high ideals. We demand free competition, but competition inevitably means greater success to some than to others. The man without ideals, he who says business is business, adopts as his rule of conduct, "anything to win," uses every means not legally prohibited to destroy his competitors, and, little by little, as the pinch comes, tries by trickery to evade the law, and finally, if he thinks himself big enough and strong enough, ignores the law. Such men deny that fair competition is possible. They represent the idea that "might makes right."

The game of football is a good example of the rough and tumble of business life. The man who plays for the ball, and in so doing outruns, knocks down, and perhaps injures an opponent, with the hope of thereby getting the ball, he plays an unfair game, and ought to be put off the field. So in business, a man should give the best that's in him to honestly and lawfully make his business succeed, but he should not make the injury or destruction of a competitor the object of his endeavor.

CANADIAN CASTILE SOAP CO.

The Grocer representative had an interview last week with G. E. Maybee, manager of the Canadian Castile Soap Co., of Berlin, Ont. The new venture managed by Mr. Maybee, who by the way is known far and wide as thoroughly posted on soaps and soap products and whose connection with the industry has long been prominent, stated that the production of genuine castile or olive oil soaps had always appealed to him and the establishment of a castile soap factory in Canada both feasible and necessary. The finest olive oils are imported direct from Italy, France and Spain and with the special machinery invented by Mr. Maybee and patented by him in England, United States and Canada, the result is that the finest pure castile soaps are being manufactured in Canada. Soaps for laundry purposes are a feature with the company and the reception by the trade has been so satisfactory that orders are getting ahead of output capacity. Besides laundry soaps the company is putting up the finest olive oil toilet soaps in most attractive packages and styles and a very large business in this is in sight. The importing of the refined olive oil in bulk and manufacturing the soaps in Canada admits of selling genuine olive oil castile soaps at prices that appeal to consumer and dealer alike. With the experience possessed by Mr. Maybee and the energy with which he is known to enter into all his business affairs success is bound to follow.

Business and Personal Happenings in Newfoundland—Trade on the Island is Very Good—Opening for Canadian Pork Products

(St. John, Nfld., September 19, 1906.)

J. H. Roberts returned from his northern trip in the interests of Vim tea. Chesley Woods, the music dealer, who accompanied him on his trip around Green Bay, sold a large number of fine organs for which he is agent. Both gentlemen report a very profitable trip.

Jos. Sellars, representative of Union Blend tea, booked a few days ago the largest order for tea taken from one house for a long time. Mr. Sellars is very popular with the trade.

Chesley Manuels, of Exploits, was in the city a few days ago. Report has it that Mr. Manuels will soon join the noble army of benedicts. Mr. Manuels and his prospective bride are very popular. The Canadian Grocer wishes them every happiness.

J. W. Hodge, Fogo, has just finished a fine new store which is fitted up very attractively. Mr. Hodge is one of our most enterprising and progressive outport merchants.

T. T. Cartwright, representative of Gillett's goods, has returned to the city after a very successful trip. Mr. Cartwright reports increased orders for Gillett's goods. There is no question about the popularity of both the representative and the goods in Newfoundland.

D. P. & L. Osmond, Morton's Harbor, will enlarge their new store built a year or two ago. This progressive firm's business has increased so rapidly of late that they have had to build two large warehouses and a new wharf, and now find their store much too small for their requirements.

C. D. Chetwynd, tea expert for Harvey & Co., has just returned from a business trip around Green Bay. His order book showed some very fine orders from the outport trade. Charlie has the tea business of Newfoundland down fine. Importing the teas as they do direct, he claims they are able to compete with the big London houses. It certainly looks as though these claims were correct, for your correspondent saw some large orders. Mr. Chetwynd was accompanied around the bay by Gillett's representative, T. T. Cartwright.

T. & M. Winter received a large invoice of Mont Bernard tobacco the other day. This progressive firm has the exclusive agency for this brand of tobacco.

John Ryan, special ambassador of the Royal Stores, is now on the west coast after doing a remarkable business in the northern bays.

H. Bowering and W. Munroe, two of our prominent merchants, and their wives left for New York on the SS. Silvia. From there they will motor to Chicago and Montreal. They will be gone about five weeks.

W. D. Reid, general manager Reid Newfoundland Co., gave the representatives of the local papers an outing to Harbor Grace in his motor car. The boys speak highly of the way they were treated.

W. Noseworthy, Clark's Beach, has been spending a few days in the city. Will is one of the best judges of horseflesh we have in the country.

The many friends among the traveling fraternity of Josiah Manuels, of Exploits, will be sorry to learn that he has not been feeling very well of late. Mr. Manuels is 76 years of age, but is a wonderfully preserved man for his years. The firm of Josiah Manuels is known the length and breadth of the land, and no firm in the country has the confidence of the importers to a greater extent than this house.

Wm. Ashbourn, of Twillingate, has opened a branch business at Herring Neck.

Ayre & Sons have opened a branch in Heart's Content.

Pitts' new premises on Water street will be a great addition to that thoroughfare when finished.

D. Curtin has returned from his vacation which he spent on Belle Island and the South Shore. Dan says he enjoyed the regatta at the latter place very much.

Dunn Bros. have moved to Hay Market Square.

Hon. J. D. Ryan imports large quantities of Irish hams and bacon. Mr. Ryan is one of our most enterprising merchants, who, by strict integrity, has worked up one of the largest trades of the colony. Mr. Ryan is a director in several local industries, and is also president of the Irish Benevolent Society, in which he takes great interest. Mr. Ryan has just returned from a holiday trip to Ireland, which he makes periodically.

R. Wright & Son have leased part of Thistle's premises, which has a fine wharf. They find that with their increased trade they need a wharf where they can handle their schooner trade.

T. & M. Winter received by SS. Polino a large shipment of Gillett's goods, including the largest shipment of Magic Baking Powder received at any one time. Our friend, T. T. Cartwright, is evidently booming things.

Pansy tea is a new brand handled by T. & M. Winter, which is meeting with a large sale. While this firm does not make a big splurge over their tea trade yet they do a large business. Quality, they claim, is their best advertisement.

The following officers were elected by the stockholders of the F. P. Wood Co., Limited: President, M. G. Winter; vice-president, F. P. Wood; secretary and treasurer, H. McConbrey. These with the following are directors: Hon. J. D. Ryan, A. H. Murray, W. Munroe, C. Marshall, P. T. Templeman and G. F. Taylor. The business of the company shows a large increase over the same time last year.

A new foundry is being started in the city and there is a report that a new butterine factory will be built.

The Thos. Smyth Co., Limited, are meeting with large sales of their Candle match. They also report a large increase of business.

J. Urquhart has taken the agency for Pure Gold goods for this market.

R. M. Moore is now on the road for Red Rose tea. Mr. Moore is on the west coast, and reports business very good.

W. J. Kennedy, who is favorably known to the outport trade, now represents the Thos. Smyth Co. He has just returned from a very profitable trip.

W. E. Bearns, the popular merchant of Hay Market Square, does a large outport business. He carries a fine assortment of goods.

NEED MORE SURPRISE SOAP.

Bigger Factory to Meet the Demand—Now Ready.

When a factory increases its capacity 40 to 50 per cent. it's a pretty good indication that the business is expanding, and when it happens to be a soap factory the odds are long that the quality of the product is commending itself to the consumers. That's the case with the Surprise soap factory at St. Stephens, N.B.

J. E. Ganong, president of the St. Croix Soap Manufacturing Co., manufacturers of Surprise soap, is now on a trip to Montreal and Toronto calling on their selling agents. When seen by a representative of The Canadian Grocer and asked about the additions to the factory he replied:

"Yes, we've been busy about three months making two additions to the factory. These will increase our output 40 to 50 per cent. To make room for the enlargement we tore down the older part of the factory erected in 1878. The work has considerably interfered with the output and the orders have got somewhat behind. We are now catching up as rapidly as possible. The enlargement was rendered necessary by the natural increase in the business. The increase has been very large this year."

This success Mr. Ganong attributes to the quality of Surprise soap and the company's liberal treatment of its customers. The company's advertising campaigns have been thorough and their material has been gotten out in good shape. Mr. Ganong was good enough to say they had obtained results from their advertising in The Canadian Grocer.

The institution was established by Ganong Bros., wholesale grocers and confectioners, who started as confectioners in the fore half of the last century. As the manufacturing departments of the business grew the jobbing was abandoned. The St. Croix Soap Manufacturing Co. was incorporated in 1884.

A lady factory inspector was at St. Stephens recently and asked Mr. Ganong: "How do you account for two such large and prosperous concerns as the St. Croix Soap Co. and the Ganong Bros., confectionery manufacturers, being in such an out of the way place?"

"Brains," replied Mr. Ganong. He was right. It takes brains to build up any business. But the location does not seem so strange when it is understood that St. Stephens affords excellent shipping facilities by both rail and water, especially for raw products,

The Loose-Leaf Systems

were first invented in the United States and improved on from time to time by different large concerns. The Crain Company purchased in 1900 the patent rights for Canada, of the leading Binder on the market, in 1901 we invented and patented another Binder and incorporated the leading features of the two in one, and improved on it until now the is the recognized standard in Canada. Imitation is the sincerest flattery. The Crain end-screw Binder is the only Binder in Canada giving direct pressure. It is being imitated by others, but not duplicated.

Stock Ledger Outfits

This is the Binder we supply with our stock outfits. We do not substitute a cheap Binder to reduce the cost. We believe a stock outfit should be as substantial as any other. When you are ordering a stock outfit see that you have the best—the one that has stood the test.

Another Fatal Accident occurred in Worcester, Mass., on August 28, 1906, when a young lady of only twenty-three years was the victim of an explosion of inflammable stove polish which she was using. After suffering for hours from frightful burns, death relieved her. These accidents are by no means rare, as we can prove to you from the daily papers. Don't take any chances by selling customers dangerous explosives under the name of stove polish. Push RISING SUN Stove Polish in cakes and SUN PASTE Stove Polish in tins. Both are absolutely safe. Both give the greatest possible satisfaction. Both pay you a good margin of profit.

WARNING!

Crescent BM&Co TRADE MARK Brand

SODA-CRYSTALS (WASHING SODA)

Foreign Soda Crystals—and some of English manufacture—are being extensively offered for sale in this country which are grossly adulterated with Glauber-Salts (Sulphate of Soda), a cheap product which is not only entirely useless for washing purposes, but is even likely to injure the fabrics with which it comes in contact. The Adulterated Soda-Crystals, although nominally lower in price than BRUNNER MOND'S PURE SODA CRYSTALS, are in reality much dearer owing to the large quantity of useless and injurious matter which they contain.

SEEDED RAISINS

THE good keeping quality of Californian Seeded Raisins is owing entirely to the fact of their being what is termed in the trade "Processed." This "processing" is simply subjecting the fruit, after it is cured, to a process of alternate great heat and then great cold, by chilling it. The raisins are placed in a hot room with a temperature as high as 140°, left there for a certain time, and then changed into the chilling room with a temperature near the freezing point. This procedure is followed several times. The result is that the saccharine quality in the fruit is somewhat changed by this treatment, and the sugar in the raisins will not candy or crystallize when exposed to the air by the skin being broken in seeding.

Owing to the scarcity of properly processed Californian Seeded Raisins, some importations have been made of Spanish Malaga Seeded Raisins, and the market being bare of Californian fruit, retail merchants have been tempted to handle this Spanish seeded fruit. This Spanish article will not keep as it is not processed. It is poor looking stuff even when it first arrives. It is worse after keeping a little while, and is absolutely unmerchantable should it be kept on the shelves a few months. It is in the interests of everyone concerned, wholesaler, retailer and consumer alike, to draw the attention of the trade generally to this fact. It will kill your trade with consumers for seeded fruit if you handle this unprocessed Spanish seeded fruit. The Spanish fruit cannot be processed owing to the more delicate quality of the skin, which will not stand the severe treatment of processing.

The better grades of Californian Seeded Raisins are all properly processed and will keep, if need be, for a year, without deteriorating in quality, or without giving any cause of complaints from the consumer.

"GRIFFIN" BRAND is now recognized the whole country over as the standard of quality for seeded raisins.

WILL PAY FOR YOUR ENERGY

It is a well-known fact that no tea ever placed on the Canadian market possesses as much intrinsic value as

Red Rose Tea

There are many ways to prove it

Try the tea yourself!
Ask other people who drink it!
Ask any disinterested tea man!

Put the energy into selling Red Rose Tea that you put into other brands, and you will sell more tea and make more money.

If you are not selling it, I think these facts will be proved by a single case. Is it not worth ordering one?

OUR MOTTO:

"Quality Regardless of Price"

This motto peculiarly applies to our Cream of Sugar Corn, which in selection, careful handling, ingredients of syrup, is made to cost much more than the ordinary brands put on the market, but is sold at a very slight advance in price over the ordinary brands. Now, what is true of our Cream Sugar Corn quality is also equally true of Farmers' Brand of Canned Peas, Corn, Beans, Tomatoes, etc. These are all delivered from our own fields to the factory, and packed fresh the same day as they are gathered.

Proof of dealers' and consumers' appreciation being that though our 1906 Pack doubles that of 1905, but very little of the former remains to be sold. We solicit a small trial order that you may be in the swim with dealers who are buying our goods.

AMERICAN NEW PURE FOOD LAW

Results Obtained at Meeting of Commissioners With Representatives of Manufacturers and Distributors—Object of the Law to Prevent Misbranding and Adulteration.

When the new pure food law passed by Congress at its last session comes into force in the United States on January 1 the people of the republic will have made a great step in advance in safeguarding their victuals, drinks, sweetmeats and drugs.

Dr. Wiley, chairman of the commission constituted under the new law to formulate rules for its enforcement, thus briefly defines the new act:

"The Food and Drugs Act has two great purposes in view which stand out clearly throughout all of its sections, namely, first, to prevent the introduction of any injurious substance to food and drug products or the abstraction of any valuable properties therefrom; second, to prevent the misbranding of any packages of food or drug products either as to the nature of the contents of the package or their properties, or as to the place, country, state or territory where made or produced. These two purposes of the law have equal weight. The first set of offences is called 'adulteration,' the second 'misbranding.'"

Hear Food Interests.

The commission of three, representatives of the departments of the Treasury, Agriculture and Commerce and Labor at Washington, sat a week in New York to hear the representatives of the food and drug interests tell what they thought the regulations under the act should be or should not be. The National Wholesale Grocers' Association was among those represented and their solicitor, Wm. C. Breed, of New York, obtained from the commission the very important statement that acticles manufactured before January 1 to meet the ordinary demands of trade would not be affected by the law.

The enforcement of the law is in the hands of the ministerial heads of the three departments named and they deputed the three commissioners to draw up the necessary rules and regulations. Before meeting the representatives of manufacturers and distributors in New York they had spent six weeks studying carefully the provisions of the new law and the character of the regulations and rules apparently necessary to secure its enforcement. The commission were not argumentative and it was with difficulty they could be got to express their views. They came simply to listen.

Results Obtained.

The actual result of the hearings, from the standpoint of the manufacturers and dealers who presented briefs and oral arguments, as nearly as can be judged from expressions of Dr. Wiley and his associates, may be given as follows:

1. Products necessarily manufactured to meet a normal demand and to take advantage of seasons before the new law becomes effective will be allowed to go into consumption, even if preservatives or coloring matter have been used. Restrictions as to labeling will be imposed.

2. The letter of the law will be adhered to in the matter of the use of coloring matter or preservatives with the single exception noted above. The rulings of the Secretary of Agriculture under the Meat Inspection law will be followed in the recommendations of the Food and Drugs Law Commission. It may be stated on authority that all mineral coloring and preservatives will be prohibited in food products.

3. Benzoate of soda, as a preservative, will come under the ban, in all probability, although the commission has not yet fully decided upon a ruling.

4. The commission, in its rulings, will not embarrass manufacturers by any strict adherence to dictionary definitions in the wording of labels. Trade terms will be recognized when there is no intention to deceive.

5. The present rulings in regard to imported products will stand and may be materially strengthened.

6. Great care will be used in the selection of samples for examination. Only original packages or properly certified goods will be used, the Government largely assuming responsibility where fraud or blackmail is charged.

7. Manufacturers and distributors may guarantee goods in any legal way which they may find convenient.

Special Act for Meat.

In due course the rules and regulations finally formulated will be published. The Food and Drugs Act does not affect meat products, these being cared for by the Meat Inspection Act, also passed by Congress at the last session.

Mr. Breed in a concluding address to the commission said:

"I predict that this meeting will prove to be of more benefit to the cause of pure food than any other gathering ever held. Certainly the manufacturers and distributors of food and drug products who have been attending these sessions must have convinced the Government representatives of their honest desire to comply with the law and assist in its enforcement, and I am sure that after the public statement made by the commission yesterday we are all agreed that the Government will not put such a strict construction of this act as will ruin business interests provided any other construction is possible and will insure pure food and drugs. We believe that a pure and healthful product can be prepared and put out, truthfully labeled, and not require an upsetting of business customs and conditions."

What the effect of the new law will be upon the retailer of groceries cannot easily be premised. It looks on the face of it as if it would relieve him of a good deal of responsibility. The question which naturally arises on this side of the line is, where are we in Canada in regard to pure food?

POINTER TO SALMON TRADE.

The attention of Canadian shippers of whole salmon is drawn by P. B. McNamara, Canadian commercial agent at Manchester, to the fact that at the present time and until the end of February, prices rule very high and the fish is very scarce. In order to overcome this scarcity and consequent high prices, a scheme is said to be inaugurated whereby the great centres of Great Britain can be supplied by shipments in a refrigerated condition from Siberia. Two steamers specially built for the frozen meat trade are said to be now loading salmon at a port on the Amur River. Immediately on being caught they will be placed in the ship's holds and kept in a frozen state until delivered. The Amur salmon is stated to be equal in size and quality to the Canadian variety. The exports of salmon from Canada to Great Britain in November, 1905, amounted to 90,853 pounds, valued at $7,119, or an average price of 8c. per pound. The wholesale price of Scotch and Irish salmon at the present time is about 2s. 3d per pound. I am confident that if more attention was paid to the English market a very much larger volume of business could be secured.

REMEDY FOR DUST ON ROADS.

W. A. McKinnon, Canadian commercial agent at Bristol, Eng., writes: "A correspondent writing in the Times of the 29th instant, states that if calcium chloride, which can be purchased at 30s. per ton at the works at Northwich, be used for heavy watering of the streets, at a strength of 1 cwt. to 100 gallons of water, and afterwards for light waterings at half strength, the dust evil will be entirely disposed of. I take it that this has reference to macadam roads. The correspondent writes: 'I was in Woodbridge (Suffolk) on the 20th instant, and the clerk of the council assured me that the streets had not been thoroughly drenched with the solution since July 28. They had been watered lightly once daily early in the morning. They were in perfect condition, and not a particle of dust flying when I inspected them.'"

Perhaps some Canadian municipalities would think it worth while to make a trial of this remedy on some part of its streets where the dust nuisance has been most pronounced.

IMPORTANT VISIT TO CANADA.

Another link in the chain of Bristol's commercial relations with Canada, writes W. A. McKinnon, Canadian commercial agent at Bristol, Eng., will be forged by the visit to all important Canadian centres of Mr. F. B. Girdlestone, secretary and general manager of the Bristol Docks Estate. The object of Mr. Girdlestone's visit is to confer with boards of trade and other organizations, with a view to bringing about a larger traffic between Bristol and Canada. Any improvements in the facilities offered at Avonmouth for such transaltantic trade which may be suggested to Mr. Girdlestone will receive careful consideration by the Bristol authorities.

A PAYING BUSINESS.

The dividend on E. W. Gillett Co's stock for the current quarter will be at the rate of 10 per cent. This will be good news to the many wholesale and retail grocers who are fortunate in being owners of some of the stock.

WINDOW AND INTERIOR DISPLAY

Picture of an Up-to-Date Grocery Depar tment in a General Store—New Idea for Window Grocery Display—A Meal and its Cost.

The world's great prizes are for the man who has that quality which is called "initiative." The reason for this is that initiative is so rare, says the Commercial Bulletin. The laws of supply and demand govern the market for brains just as they govern the market for salt or oranges. Were there plenty of men of initiative there would be few prizes for them.

Almost the hardest thing in the world is to think up something new—absolutely new. That this is so is proven by the comparatively small number of really new things and ideas that are evolved. The continual demand of the world is for "something new, something different."

It is this demand which the window trimmer must try to satisfy every time he puts in a new trim. If it is the same old idea that people have seen over and over again it will not attract the attention that is desired. To use canned cans of tomatoes this week instead of the cans of corn used last week will not be evolving something new, if they are arranged in the same old stereotyped pyramids, stacks and columns.

There are fewer original and effective window displays in grocery store windows than in those of almost any other stores. Lack of suitable material for displays cannot be brought forward as an excuse for this, for certainly the grocer has at his disposal a large and varied stock of goods which are capable of being shown in striking and appealing ways. There is really no excuse for it.

The aim of the grocer should be, of course, to display his goods so conspicuously and attractively as to create in the beholder a desire to eat some of them. This—to create desire—is, of course, the aim of all display and advertising, whether it be display of dry goods, hardware or groceries, or advertising in the newspapers or otherwise. Having created this desire, the next thing is to impress upon the beholder the idea that the things which look so good can be secured at a low price. If a merchant can succeed in impressing these two ideas firmly on the mind of the man or woman who looks in his windows he is pretty likely to make a sale.

Now, since the aim of the grocer is to make the window-gazer's "mouth water," is it wise for him to pile up in his window a great pyramid of cans and bottles? Does the dry goods merchant make great piles in his window of bolts of cloth and closed boxes containing shoes and gloves? Does the cigar dealer display piles of closed cigar boxes?

The stuff that is inside the can or the box is what interests the consumer. On the outside there may be a very handsome label printed in three colors, but the man who buys the package wants to know what the contents look like. It has been suggested that grocers display in a neat and attractive manner the contents of the cans and bottles, arranged in dishes or on saucers or plates. Canned fruit or vegetables, crackers, canned fish, potted meats, cocoanut, coffee, tea, condensed milk, jellies, preserves, jams and pickles may all be shown in this manner.

A new idea for displaying groceries is that of showing in the window a large card, bearing a model menu, and showing with it the goods themselves. For instance, prepare a card about 14 x 22 inches size, headed "A Delicious Breakfast." The menu might be as follows:

Grapes.
Oatmeal and Cream.
Poached Eggs on Toast.
German Fried Potatoes.
Griddle Cakes, Maple Syrup.
Coffee.

This menu may be altered or elaborated upon to suit the taste of the individual grocer, but the price of each article should be displayed immediately after it on the menu card.

Then, immediately in front of this menu card, the goods themselves should be shown. The grapes may be either in the original basket or in a dish. The oatmeal packages should be opened at the top and tipped over an oatmeal dish so that its contents are partly poured into the dish. The cream may be shown in a glass pitcher or in a bottle. A loaf of bread with half a dozen eggs will represent the poached eggs on toast and half a dozen raw potatoes are suggestive of the "German fried." The griddle cake flour, with a can of maple syrup, and a large measure full of unground coffee, will complete the display.

This idea may be enlarged upon or varied to suit the taste and conditions in each particular case. If desired, several of these menus may be shown at the same time, and other menus for dinner and luncheon may be easily arranged. Just how, an exceptionally seasonable menu would be one for a picnic dinner, which would be easy because of its almost entire dependence on canned meats and fruits.

Much interest could be added by indicating on the card or a separate card the cost of a meal for each individual.

GROCERIES A GENERAL STORE.

A section of the grocery department of A. Beattie & Co., St. Mary's, Ont., is shown in the accompanying illustration. It is located at the rear of a 150 foot floor, the main part of which is taken up with dry goods. The store occupies a corner, and the grocery department is served by a separate entrance from the side street. The excellence of this department furnishes an index to the high standard maintained throughout the whole store. The business has been established for many years. The staff of nearly fifty is now employed.

EDMONTON OPPORTUNITIES.

Under the above title the Edmonton Board of Trade issued an attractive booklet last month for distribution among the members of the Canadian Manufacturers' party. The introduction consists of a quotation from an article appearing in the Western Board of Trade issue of this paper last June and it is followed by a mass of information about Edmonton given in concise and readable form. Edmonton undoubtedly offers splendid opportunities as a manufacturing site and the Board of Trade are alive to the necessity of advertising.

U. S. CURRENCY REFORM.

For years business interests in the United States have been hampered by the inelastic nature of their systems of currency and banking. In March last the New York Chamber of Commerce appointed a committee to report a plan for the remedy of the defects in the currency system. The committee after investigation and study covering a wide field of experience and suggestion reported last week, submitting alternative plans.

It recommends as its first choice the creation of a central bank of issue similar to the Bank of Germany or the Bank of France, such bank to deal exclusively with banks, and its stock to be owned in part by banking institutions and in part by the Government, but with the proviso that the representatives of the Government shall be supreme in the management. Under the plan proposed this central bank would issue currency, rediscount for other banks, hold public money, and act as agent of the Government in redeeming its paper money and making its disbursements.

The committee has not shut its eyes to the fact that public sentiment in the United States may not be found in a receptive state as regards what it deems the more desirable solution of the currency problem, and it presents as an alternative a plan under which national banks whose bond-secured circulation equals 50 per cent. of their capital should be allowed to issue additional notes equal in amount to 35 per cent. thereof, such additional notes to be subject to a graduated tax, ranging from 2 per cent. on the first issue of 5 per cent. of the capital to 6 per cent. on the last issue of 10 per cent. thereof. It is proposed that the proceeds of the graduated tax should constitute a guarantee fund in the custody of the Government for the redemption of the notes of failed banks.

Other recommendations are that the law restricting the retirement of national bank notes to $3,000,000 a month be repealed; that future issues of United States bonds be not made available as a basis for the issue of national bank notes, and that a law be enacted requiring all money in the general fund in the treasury above a reasonable working balance be deposited in national banks.

THE RETAILER'S BANKER.

From practically every standpoint the interests of the jobber and retailer are mutual and each must depend to a certain extent upon the other. Price cutting and kindred evils which injure the retail trade and prevent a fair margin of profit from being secured hurt the jobber almost as much as the retail dealer. Consequently any movement upon the part of retailers to organize to better their position should meet with the approval of the wholesalers, whose capital is invested in stocks to be sold or already advanced to retail customers.

Few retail merchants are in a position to buy their goods for cash, when they are obliged to extend credit to their customers for varying terms from 30 days to one year—and rarely sure of payment of one hundred cents on every dollar of credit outstanding. The comparatively small number doing business on a cash basis might be able to pay spot cash, but the average dealer needs a banker and a bank credit, and he has them both in his jobber.

And how many manufacturers can afford to employ a force of salesmen sufficient to sell a bill of goods to every small buyer in the limited quantities his capital compels him to buy—a half dozen of this line and a twelfth of a dozen of another ?

Jobbers to-day must have ample capital before they can meet the demands made upon them. Great warehouses representing investments of hundreds of thousands of dollars, erected on valuable ground in the wholesale centre of the great cities, bear witness to the importance of the jobber.

The modern jobber knows about how many bales of wire, how many ranges, or how many dozens of shovels will be sold during the season, and he places the order for his season's supply with the different manufacturers. He exercises wisdom, visits the marts frequently, keeps posted on every phase of the situation, is on the watch for bargains, and keeps his large capital employed or husbanded as he reads the signs of the times.

An instance of how the retailers' association could be of assistance to the jobber came to light during the past week. An Ontario wholesaler found cutting going on in a line he sold to retail customers. He notified the manufacturer that the price of his line was not being maintained but as the price cutter was a large retailer who bought direct from manufacturers the manufacturer declined to interfere and the price cutting continued. If the jobber had been assured of the support of an organized retail trade the manufacturer would probably have acted in an entirely different manner.

The relations of banker and depositor should be maintained between jobber and retailer and each should conserve the interests of the other and help to strengthen their trade associations.

MORE ABOUT RETURNED DRAFTS.

In a recent issue the subject of returned drafts was discussed in some of its most common phases and the consideration of the retailer asked in facilitating transactions and saving extra charges. "Goods not yet checked over," "drawee out of town," or merely the word "refused," were quoted as endorsations with which a wholesaler or jobber's paper is frequently returned, resulting in inconvenience in bookkeeping and the loss of the bank's service fee and interest.

In a great many instances there is undoubtedly room for complaint against the retailer, but he, in turn, is not without a grievance. Sometimes he is presented with a draft several days before the goods arrive and he could not reasonably be expected to accept it. The wholesaler or jobber should time his drafts so that sufficient margin may be allowed for checking shipments.

Small shortages or overdrafts may be overlooked as adequate cause for refusal to execute an acceptance. A jobber or wholesaler of any standing would certainly hasten to adjust an error of this kind. However, we know of one case where the mistake amounted to over $50. Good business form, not a fear that he would lose the difference, renders a merchant loth to accept under such circumstances. He follows the principle that it is a good deal easier to keep an account straight than to make it straight once it gets out of plumb.

RUNNING A MUNICIPALITY.

Government by a commission of experts each endowed with executive ability of superior order is, theoretically, the ideal system of municipal administration. Practically it is impossible. The first question confronting the "commissionist" is "how would you elect or appoint the commission.

It is becoming a habit with city and towns people when condemning their municipal government, to remark "government by commission is the only way." Not one in a thousand has given the matter careful consideration.

Municipal government in Canada—and to the average citizen it is the most important government we have—must be worked out on the basis of popular representation. There are now two opposite tendencies in municipal method. the one growing in favor in Canada, is to concentrate executive authority in the hands of a small committee or board, in Ontario called the Board of Control and make the functions of council legislative and supervisory. The other tendency, almost universal in Great Britain, is to divide executive authority among a great number of standing committees. Some councils have scores of such standing committees each devoting itself to a minute detail of civic administration. Of course, the councils are large.

The former system seems the more natural on this side the Atlantic. Nowhere yet has it approached perfection, but it has given good results thus far.

Wishing for municipal government by commission is like crying for the moon. In the first place, it isn't likely to be forthcoming and in the second place they wouldn't know what to do with it if they had it.

If people would only learn that they themselves are the rulers of their city, appreciate their responsibilities of citizenship and vote and act accordingly, the great and pressing problems of municipal government would be quickly solved.

PREMIERS AT OTTAWA.

This meeting of provincial premiers at Ottawa is not a healthy sign. The talk of beginning provincial jurisdiction for a larger subsidy hand out from the Federal treasury smacks of the late Esau's improvident dicker for a mess of pottage with his shrewder and more abstemous brother Jacob. In a democratic country where all government is based upon popular representation, centralization of power is to be guarded against. The Federal authority should take care of only what in the nature of things the provinces cannot do for themselves and the provincial legislatures should in turn delegate to the municipalities all matters that may be made municipally individual or be municipally bounded. The nearer home the subjects of administration can be brought the more intelligent the interest people will take in them, and the cleaner and healthier and more sane will be the national life. The man who neglects his civic responsibilities, no matter how high may be his walk in provincial or federal politics, is not a good citizen, at any rate not as good as he ought to be.

Then there is another, though analagous reason, why the provincial premiers would have been better at home. Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated it in his address to them: "The subsidies which we give to the provinces out of the exchequer cannot be said to be altogether in accordance with the old doctrine that they should have the responsibility of spending who also have the responsibility of collecting the revenue." Perhaps an older doctrine is that the privilege of spending should carry with it the responsibility of collecting. At any rate, both functions, getting and spending, should go together. Nothing in political economy is sounder than that. Therefor the provincial premiers are heading the wrong way.

WINDOW DRESSING COMPETITION

Don't forget The Canadian Grocer's monthly window dressing competition. It is an opportunity for clerks to prove their quality. Send a photograph and a short description of how the window is dressed. The prizes are $5, $3 and $2. The store window is a neglected means of advertising that every grocer should cultivate.

DRIED FRUITS IN SEASON.

Not in the memory of man, as Caesar would have said, has there been such a dried fruit season as this. The root of the trouble was the failure of the Valencia and Sultana raisin crops. The Greek currant merchants seeing their opportunity have boosted the price of their product and the American markets are to a great extent falling back upon the California seeded raisin. The crop is all right, large, in fact, but the conditions for marketing it are adverse in the extreme. Railway blockades, scarcity of labor, high prices of materials are all hindering the progress of the crop to the consumer and together with the abnormal demand, furnishing the growers and packers with good reasons for advancing prices.

Despite all drawbacks, however, the consumption of California seeded package raisins will be larger in Canada this year than ever before. This will give the Canadian housekeeper a larger opportunity for studying the comparative merits of the Spanish and California fruit.

The Californian hasn't the flavor of the Spanish; its producers admit that, but it can be seeded successfully and its convenience is expected to commend it to the consumer. Attempts have been made to seed the Spanish fruit, but it has so much sugar and so thin a skin that it is apt to candy before the output is consumed. The Californian fruit is submitted to a sort of sugar refining process after being dried and before being seeded, which aided by its tougher skin and drier quality insures its keeping in good shape. The process to which the California raisin is submitted consists of alternately heating and chilling.

Well informed importers estimate that not more than a fifth of the usual Canadian importation of Valencia raisins will be brought in this year. High prices will of course restrict consumption to some extent, but the deficiency will be made up from California.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Imports into France increased during the first seven months of this year from $540,636,000 to $597,048,000, and exports from $516,597,000 to $551,311,000.

The importations of cheese into Australia for 1904 and 1905 were very much below those of previous years. They amounted to £12,494 last year, of which £337 is credited as coming from Canada. New Zealand, Germany, the United Kingdom and Belgium furnished the bulk of the trade. The Canadian share of the trade has fallen very materially. It ought to be increased and should be with careful provision for safe carriage

QUEBEC MARKETS.

Pointers:—

Fish—Revised.

Evaporated apples—Declined.

Maple products—Higher.

Montreal, Oct. 10, 1906.

Continued good business makes it possible for the trade to expect a good Fall turnover. Jobbers report many good-sized orders from country points, while collections are said to be first class. The feature of the grocery market this week is the situation in dried fruits. The upward tendency continues in most lines. A small shipment of prunes reached Montreal this week and everybody is after a quantity of the new stock, so that agents are in a quandry. The Oregon crop of prunes is reported almost a failure. It seems that ripening set in too quickly for the packers to take care of the crop. Interest in black teas continues. Advices received say that they are upward in tendency. Since last week prices have advanced over one cent. Honey is higher this week as are also maple products. Sugar is rather easy than otherwise. There is a little more interest displayed in molasses this week and also in coffee.

CANNED GOODS—Nothing further has developed in the canned goods situation. The trade is resigned to the new prices, the normal conditions have been resumed. Many orders have been cancelled, modified or otherwise affected by the new lists. At present, deliveries of confirmed orders are being made. Jobbers have, most of them, received shipments from the factories, and in turn are filling the commands of their customers.

TEA—The tea market this week is rather strong. There is considerable interest displayed in all blacks, which, according to latest reports are advancing. Since last report there has been an advance of from 1c. to 2c. on low grades, medium and higher. Quite a lot of attention has been given to black teas of every description since the close of the Japan season, the demand being continually strong. Prices are more likely to advance than decline, if present indications work out. China blacks are firm while greens present no new feature. Ceylon greens are scarce, the market here being scantily supplied. A good figure is obtainable for anything in this line.

FOREIGN DRIED FRUITS — The feature of the market this week is the situation in California. Packers are working under the most deplorable conditions. There is scarcity of labor; of packing material; of cars and of everything else esential to the carrying on of their business, except fruit. There is plenty of fruit but no way of shipping it. It is said that one large packing house is not in the slightest interested in any new business There has been a small shipment of prunes to Montreal, being about sufficient to cause a great deal of trouble for Montreal representatives of the fruit houses on the coast, because the shipment is not enough to fill anything like the number of orders which are waiting. Reports state that the Oregon crop of prunes has been almost destroyed, because it ripened too quickly. The California crop is falling considerably under first estimates, the large sizes not being obtainable. The raisin crop is well under way. Dried apricots, peaches, pears continue to advance. Figs have been put up also, and are now 5s. to 6s. above opening price. The prices this week are about 1-2c. to 1c. above last week's figures. There is nothing further from Greece about currants, while there is nothing of particular interest in advices from Spain.

BUTTER—Market slightly easier, but prices are well maintained.

CHEESE—Prices steady.

EGGS — Firm tone in market continues. Prices unchanged.

PROVISIONS—Nothing new. Dressed hogs quoted $9.50 to $9.75 per 100 lbs.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Sugar market unsteady.
Currants firm again and higher.
Good demand for canned goods.
Eggs higher.

Toronto, October 11, 1906.

Business in the grocery trade is brisk and collections are satisfactory. The wholesalers' credit men who take a minute to think about it congratulate themselves on the fact that crops have been good. Had it been otherwise they would have had a lot more trouble on their hands now.

Wholesalers report that the retail trade is taking hold of canned goods well but here and there it is found that the high price is still an impediment. Some wholesalers say, "We're not pushing them; we'll get more for them later." Others are content with the situation.

There is considerable buying of dried fruit but the retail trade is pretty chary of taking hold at prices which make currants and raisins luxuries. The easiness in the currant market has passed and the fruit is higher than before. Sugar is passing rapidly into consumption but the market is regarded as unsteady. The price is made on first shipment dates, Hallowees only, at 5¾ to 6 cents

CANNED GOODS — There are no changes in quotations. Wholesalers say there is a brisk demand but consumption is not as heavy as last year. The belief is strongly held in some quarters that prices will be higher before next Spring. But packing of tomatoes is still in progress and the situation is incomplete. American tomatoes are quoted: 3's, 92½c. to 95c. As the duty is 1½c. a lb. gross weight, it can be seen the price here has room to expand before it will bump up against the imported article

SUGAR—The course of European beet sugar prices, f.o.b. Hamburg, for a week beginning October 3, was: 9s. 4½d., 9s. 3½d., 9s. 3¾d., 9s. 3½d., 9s. 3¾d.

Willett & Gray, New York, in their last weekly report, say after speaking of Cuban affairs.

"Under these new conditions, all the markets of the world have declined. The closing quotation here being 4c. for 96 degrees test Centrifugals against 4⅛c., the highest point recently reached. The closing quotation for beet sugars in Europe is 9s. 3¾d., against the highest point reached of 10s. 3d. The closing price for Java sugars afloat is 4c. for 96 degrees test at which they are offered, against the highest sale made at equivalent of 4⅛c. per lb.

"These declines are directly traceable to the improvement in the Cuban affairs, the European crop prospects having remained throughout generally favorable and having had no important bearing on the market during the recent crisis. From this time forward, however, beet crop prospects and Cuba crop prospects will work together to establish market quotations.

"Refiners' supply of cane sugars is very limited and as very few Cuba sugars of the last crop remain unsold, these are held at prices considerably above the parity of European beet sugars which to-day at 9s. 3d. is the equivalent of 3.93c. per lb. for 96 degrees test Centrifugals. New crop Cuba Centrifugals are offered in a small way for December-January shipment at 2 7-16c. for 96 degrees test equivalent to 3.80c. landed duty paid.

"The final outturn of the Cuba crop depends more than anything else upon the supply of laborers for harvesting. The conditions of the cane and the quantity of cane are sufficient for a very large crop provided proper labor can be had to secure it.

"As regards the European beet crop Mr. F. O. Licht's preliminary estimates have not yet been given out, although he has called attention to some trade estimates which indicate a minimum crop of 6,045,000 tons to a maximum crop of 6,515,000 tons against the actual crop of last year, 6,954,000 tons."

Visible supply.—Total stock of Europe and America, 1,309,103 tons, against 1,094,007 tons last year at the same uneven dates. The increase of stock is 215,096 tons, against an increase of 239,139 tons last week. Total stocks and afloats together show a visible supply of 1,529,103 tons, against 1,374,007 tons last year, or an increase of 155,096 tons.

TEA—The market for all lines is very firm. Indian teas, blacks and greens, have advanced a cent a pound. It is not, however, the custom of buyers on this market to take hold on a rising market. Francis F. Street, in a mail advice from Ceylon under date of August 29 says :

"Offerings during the past fortnight have been rather heavier than in the previous one, but as a very large proportion of the offerings were fannings and dusts and a good deal of low common second-hand tea has been printed, the quantity of interesting tea has been very small.

"The market is firm to advancing for all grades and good liquoring sorts and finest teas have met with very keen competition. Common to medium pekoes show an advance of fully 3 cents, due to heavy Russian buying. Good dusts and fannings are selling at 'famine' prices and were dearer in last sale than ever before.

"There have been some very fine invoices offered for which competition was very keen, but the supply of fine tea is very small and not nearly enough for trade requirements."

COFFEE—Willett & Gray in their last weekly report say :

"No one doubts that each Brazil crop is marketed more rapidly than the preceding one. No one can deny that the Brazilians have been favored with most remarkable dry weather for harvesting and curing this crop, having practically no rain since April — five months dry weather, barring a few showery days. But no one will deny that the movement of the crop in Brazil has been very rapid. Receipts at Rio and Santos for the first three months were 5,550,000 bags. In the same time 951,000 bags of other kinds came into sight and yet the world's visible supply on October 1 is exactly 470,000 bags less than this time last year when coffee prices were half cent per pound higher than now. In these same three months the actual seaport deliveries in Europe and the United States were 4,000,000 bags on the hand-to-mouth basis. * * * There are strong factors for advance in the bad prospects for the growing crop, in the enormous short interest, and in the peculiar conditions which exist regarding the firm holdings of nearby option contracts in the market, and we repeat that the future of coffee will bring interesting developments and a big advance seems inevitable."

DRIED FRUITS—With the exception that currants have firmed up again in the primary market, no change has come over the face of the situation during the week. A London advice regarding Valencias received this week says : "The first direct steamer will take 350 tons for all Canada and according to recent advices from Spain, I doubt there will be any raisins remaining by the time the second direct steamer sails. Practically the crop is ruined."

Three hundred and fifty tons is about 28,000 boxes. The ordinary importation into Canada is between two and three hundred thousand boxes. A prominent broker said yesterday he did not believe there would be brought into Canada a fifth of the usual importation. It was becoming, he said, not as much a question of price as of fruit.

Sultanas are stronger than ever. It would cost now to import 9½c. for commonest grades and 11½c. to 12½c. for medium.

Red clover and timothy have scarcely begun to move as yet, so that the prices can not be said to be established. Tentatively, however, they are :

Red clover—Choice lots, $6.75 to $7. Seed containing buckborn, dock and other weed seeds are at a big discount, from $5.40 to $6.

Timothy—Machine threshed, containing very few weed seeds, $1.65 to $1.85. Flail threshed, bright unhulled seed, $2.10 to $2.25. Samples of timothy containing much weed seed are quoted at 1½c. to 2c.

MARKET HINTS.

Exclusive control for the sale of Boulle's famous Minerva olive oil has been secured by Laporte, Martin & Cie., Limited. On each bottle of this table oil is attached a certificate of analysis from a French Government officer, attesting its purity. Their travelers have now samples with them. A miniature bottle of this oil will be mailed to any grocer, or hotelkeeper who wishes to give it a trial.

Frederick Dane & Co., have been appointed agents. at Toronto for Sugars Limited, Montreal.

T. A. Stone has bought the business of Foster, Kissock & Metcalf, Hawkstone, Ont. Mr. Stone was the Michigan Central agent at Hagersville, but he formerly owned the business he is now buying back from Foster, Kissock & Metcalf. Years ago Mr. Stone was a telegraph operator and that's where he got his taste for railroading, which he now appears to have satisfied. It was a traveler gave The Grocer man this item of news, and another traveler standing by exclaimed, "Good, I'm glad he's back." He knew him.

WESTERN ASSOCIATION NEWS

"The Canadian Grocer" the Official Organ.

Address all communications for this department to THE CANADIAN GROCER, 511 Union Bank Building, Winnipeg, Man.

Secretary W. A Coulson is in the country this week beginning in the Dauphin district a campaign of organization in the country towns and villages. With the month of October money is commencing to circulate more freely, business is more active and dealers are anxious for local organization.

It is through the local organization that dealers derive their principal benefit from the association. Through the local organization dealers in the same town or district are brought in touch with each other and are able to deal with local problems arising from local conditions. They meet once or twice a month and compare notes, giving each other information as to bad accounts and agreeing as to the policy to be pursued in regard to credit and other matters.

It is from the local association the local organization of dealers that the direct, tangible, dollars and cents benefit from membership in the association is derived. The secretary is willing and anxious to assist in the organization of local sections, but he cannot do the work of several men, and there are limits to the work of this character which he can undertake. In this matter each local section must work out its own salvation. The central one has shown the correct method of work and it is up to the country dealers to work upon the lines laid down. Distances are too great for the secretary to visit the scene of every complaint and moreover his time is pretty fully occupied with the larger affairs of the general association.

But while it is from the local organization that the direct tangible benefit from membership in the association is derived it must not be thought that the central organization is of no importance. It is concerned with the general interests of the trade and is the mouthpiece of the retail trade in general This is an age of consolidation and organization, and the other branches of the trade have long had their own associations. The manufacturers and the wholesalers are organized to protect their own interests and it is the part of wisdom and prudence for retailers to unite to protect their own interests. It is not intended to suggest that the manufacturers and wholesalers would be deliberately unfair to the retailers, but "business is business" and business is essentially selfish; consequently it is well that the retailer should be able to act with his fellows in an association when dealing with organizations of wholesalers and retailers. The individual who opposes an association stands a poor chance of success.

It is for this reason that the central office has the right to appeal with confidence to the retail trade for support. It is surely worth $5 per year to every retailer in the west to be identified with an association of his fellows, to know that he is helping to support an organization which has been formed to protect the general interests of the retail trade.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Market quotations corrected by telegraph up to 12 a.m. Thursday, Oct. 11, 1906.)

With colder weather business is reported more active in the country and liberal buying is reported by commercial travelers. Values are steady in most lines and there is still a strong upward tendency in foreign dried fruits.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS

Halifax, October 9, 1906.

The retail grocers did a rushing trade during the exhibition, but the wholesale trade was rather quiet. Prices are firm and collections good. The quotations on canned goods have arrived and while the jobbers anticipated an advance over last year, the figures quoted are somewhat of a surprise. They are as follows for ten-case lots : Corn, No. 1, 95c., No. 2 92½c. ; less than ten-case lots, No. 1, 97½c., No. 2, 95c. Tomatoes, group No. 1, $1.22½, No. 2, $1.20 ; less than ten-case lots, No. 1, $1.25, No. 2, $1.22½. Peaches and pears are about the same as last year, but plums are higher. A shortage is expected in the salmon pack and dealers here say their orders are coming along very slowly. Jobbers also say that yellow-eyed beans will be higher this year.

BUTTER—General complaint is heard regarding the price of butter, and it is the opinion of all that the prices are too high. The past two years during the Autumn season the price of butter has been jumped up without any apparent good reason. The consumption is not any greater, and there is not as much butter exported as heretofore. The receipts on the whole are up to the average. The jobbers have to pay high prices and it is not they who are making the profit. The majority of them endeavor to keep the price down so as to hold their customers. Dairy is quoted from 21c. to 22c., and creamery prints 27c.

EGGS—A better quality of eggs are now reaching the market, the cooler weather conditions being responsible for the improvement. The price is firm, eggs being quoted on the island at 18c. and here at 20c. Good Nova Scotia eggs are not very plentiful, and the price varies from 22c. to 26c. per dozen. Cheese remains firm at 13½c. to 14c.

VEGETABLES—The arrival of the first produce-laden vessels has caused the potato market to become a little easier, Prince Edward Island now being quoted at 50c. per bushel, and Nova Scotia at 60c. Turnips are selling at $1.25 per barrel, beets and carrots at $1.50 and parsnips at $2. A further drop in potatoes is looked for at an early date, as from now on the vessels will be arriving from the island with big cargoes.

FISH—The market is well supplied with fish, both fresh and salted. The price of dry fish is unchanged since last report, but an advance is looked for, as the dealers are buying up all the fish available. Mackerel have again struck in along the coast, and some of the hand line fishermen are doing well, but no large catches have been reported. The fish are large and fat, and command a good figure now. Oysters are very high and there is a big demand for this kind of fresh fish, not only locally but in other parts of the Dominion, particularly in the big cities. Oysters this season will be higher than ever before. It is expected that the shipments from the island will be up to the average, but the consumption being greater causes the price to advance. Hand picked oysters are now quoted at $7.50 to $8 per barrel.

William Duff, managing director of the Atlantic Fish Co., has gone to Bay of Islands, Nfld., where his company has purchased a fishing stand in the centre of the great herring grounds. It is the intention of the company to cater to the herring trade of Canada, and already goods are being exported as far as the Yukon.

The recent agitation in regard to sheep raising is resulting in farms being purchased suitable for the industry by men of means who purpose introducing new breeds into the country and endeavoring to make the enterprise successful by every means in their power. The North Mountain, in Cornwallis County, has been selected as the most favorable spot for sheep raising and several farms are being negotiated for to this end by business men in different sections of that county. It offers natural facilities for sheep raising to the man who is anxious to make the industry a lucrative one.

James Whitehead, of Whitehead & Huether, Walkerton, Ont., has arrived home from a very pleasant trip to the west. Mr. Whitehead was shooting prairie chickens on several occasions during his sojourning in the great growing land and brought back a number of photographs bearing incontrovertible evidence of his prowess with the gun and his good fortune. Now Mr. Whitehead is feeling fit for big Fall business. He looks after the grocery and crockery end and Mr. Huether the dry goods and millinery.

WITH THE TRADE AT OTTAWA

Business Brisk—Canned Goods Prices—The Potato Market—The Flour Situation —Death of Mrs. H. N. Bate, a Lady Highly Esteemed.

Business has been reported fairly good during the past week among retailers. Wholesalers are extra busy taking into stock Fall and Winter supplies. New raisins and figs are to be had and are being snapped up freely.

A good deal of comment is heard on the new price set for canned goods. Some retailers feel that with corn selling at 3 for 25c. and tomatoes at 10c. it is poor satisfaction putting in a Winter supply. Of course the above prices are not what should be, but because of those merchants who bought from independent factories having an extra advantage of 10 off they are able to sell at above figures and show a seasonable profit. Other dealers who bought from the association have to follow and sell at what is the bare cost of handling. However, there is the consolation of the possibility of a rising market, which may help to strengthen retailers' prices. It is also thought by some of the merchants here that if the leading stores would come out with their opening prices of this season's goods at 10c. for corn and peas and 12 1-2c. for tomatoes, it would have a beneficial effect to all and set the canned goods business on a proper basis as far as the retail trade of Ottawa is concerned.

Over 1,200 boxes of cheese were boarded on the local board Friday last and the price obtained was 12 3-4c. for both white and colored.

Small fruits are pretty well over for the season with the exception of grapes, which are not any too plentiful. Apples are commanding good prices on this market. Not much local grown stock is to be had, which other years, when supplies are plentiful, has had an effect on western grown fruit.

Shipments of potatoes from outside points have been arriving on this market and selling at 85c. to 90c. a bag with a good demand; it looks as if these prices will be maintained for a while.

The flour market is brisk, their being a good demand by housekeepers at this season, as many who do not bake their own bread during the Summer do so when the cold weather starts. Prices to the trade here are: For Hungarian Patent, $4.40 per bbl, and Strong Bakers, $3.90. Bran is quoted about $19, and shorts $22.

The death occurred on Friday last of the wife of H. N. Bate, head of the firm of H. N. Bate & Sons, wholesale grocers, this city. Mrs. Bate was an estimable lady and one who will be greatly missed by a large circle of friends. She was ill about two weeks before her death. The funeral took place on Monday the 8th inst., from her late residence, Fenwick House, to All Saint's Church (Anglican), thence to Beechwood Cemetery. The cortege was the largest seen in the city for some time. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and other members of the Cabinet were in attendance besides a large concourse of prominent Ottawa people. The casket was borne by her sons, Gerald, Harry A., Llnorllyn, Thomas A. and Frank, with her nephew, H. Christie, and it was a sad sight to notice with what loving care they deposited it to its last resting place.

The Ottawa grocery trade extends its deepest sympathy to Mr. Bate and his family in their bereavement.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN.

The situation on cheese remains practically unchanged since last week. New business is scarce, while the shipments were again heavy, which simply confirms our previously expressed opinion that a great many September cheese were sold "short," and which may also account for the firm country markets, when there is hardly any new business to warrant buying at present prices.

Shipments of cheese last week, as will be seen from figures later on, were nearly 30,000 boxes more than the receipts, which indicates that the goods were largely wanted on previously made contracts, and also that a large quantity of goods, held here for account of British houses, were ordered to be shipped as the present demand for prompt shipment is very light and our market is very quiet with prices even a shade lower.

Our receipts at Montreal were last week 76,767 boxes of cheese and 13,064 packages of butter, against 87,294 boxes of cheese and 21,720 packages of butter for the same week of last year, or since May 1, 1,884,708 boxes of cheese and 524,470 packages of butter, as compared with 1,832,280 boxes of cheese and 656,854 packages of butter for the corresponding period of last year.

Our exports from Montreal were last week 105,667 boxes of cheese and 12,261 packages of butter against 119,334 boxes of cheese and 20,807 packages of butter for the same week of last year, or a total since May 1 of 1,787,069 boxes of cheese and 339,191 packages of butter, as compared with 1,646,626 boxes of cheese and 509,378 packages of butter for the corresponding period of last year.

According to these figures our receipts of cheese show an increase of 52,428 boxes and our shipments show an increase of 140,443 boxes, leaving naturally a decrease in our Montreal stocks of 88,015 boxes as compared with the same date of last year, while in butter our receipts are 132,384 packages less and our exports are 170,187 packages less than last year, which would mean a surplus stock of 37,803 packages over the same time of last year.

These are the figures as we get them. The receipts are not accurate; the exports are correct. It is generally calculated that our receipts of cheese previously were about 10 per cent. more than actual figures published, and this year it is believed that 5 per cent. will cover this difference. Taking this basis we find that our receipts of cheese last year were 2,015,508 boxes and this year they were only 1,978,944 boxes, which would mean that we hold 124,579 boxes of cheese less in store in Montreal than at this time last year.

Stocks in England are reported at about 100,000 boxes larger than at this time last year. Present prices are considerably higher than at this date a year ago, but larger supplies last year proved insufficient for the Winter's trade and prices went to fully 70s. per cwt. As we are at present fully 5s. per cwt. lower than this, it seems reasonable to expect a further advance in prices.

Mr. G. G. Publow, the chief dairy instructor for Eastern Ontario, made the statement that he found hardly any September cheese in the factories he visited last week, ending October 6. The country seems bare of cheese, when formerly they had a fair quantity unsold, and altogether the situation seems decidedly "bullish."

The situation on butter seems very strange. According to figures given above, our stocks of butter are fully 37,803 packages larger than at this time last year. In spite of this, it is hard to find any good "stored" creamery butter and there is a positive scarcity of this grade on our Montreal market, but our prices are, and have been, above the export basis right along, and the decreased shipments demonstrate this very clearly. We can only account for this, that probably the west has sent in more dairy butter, which may show an accumulation of stocks here.

At present it is firmly believed that prices of finest creamery butter will be higher in the near future. At any rate the tone of the market, both in Montreal and at country points, is very firm.

OUR LONDON (ENG.) LETTER.

The cheese market in London has ruled something quieter during the past week, due, no doubt, to the fact that the quarter day is at hand, and people are busy getting their finances in order. Sellers are retaining their firm attitude, and it is quite possible that, apart from the advent of quarter day, buyers are beginning to feel that prices are too stiff and that a policy of caution is advisable. It is difficult to accurately guage the trend of public consumption, but one or two of the larger dealers declare that the advent of colder weather has brought a falling off in demand for cheese. This is certainly rather curious, and hardly what one might have expected. Still, the demand for cheese has not been so peculiar during the past few months, and demand and supply have been so surprisingly irregular, that one has come to expect almost anything. Supplies of Canadian cheese continue to come to hand in fair quantities, and there are at time of writing some 30,000 boxes on the way to London. Total stocks in depot figure out at about 199,000 boxes, so that it will be seen that a healthy position is maintained, with a slight inclination for stocks to slowly accumulate. "Choicest" August make of Canadian is still on offer, and is realizing from 63s. to 64s. As mentioned last week, cable advices for October make are exceedingly high, and it remains to be seen how sales will be effected at such figures as Canadians are demanding. While there has been perhaps a little more money in Canadian cheese, as well as butter, for importers over here, it must be confessed that profits are not being easily made, and Canadian farmers stand to reap a harvest of dollars again this year.

There has been a brisk demand for all higher grades of butter throughout the week, and buyers have been compelled to cope with an advancing market. Canadian make is moving well at prices ranging from 114s. to 116s for best quality Lower grades are not in such good demand, whilst dairies realize 92s. to 96c., which is a slight advance. As far as quality is concerned there is not much to report. It will be a long time before the evil effect, brought about by the recent mouldy arrivals on this market, is effaced. The writer has before him quite a list of factories in Canada who have made for themselves an undesirable reputation. It must be borne in mind all the time, however, that butter of an excellent quality is also being received. One does not want to magnify the harm done even in the smallest degree. It is bad enough as it is.

PROVISION SITUATION.

"I can't tell you any more than I told you a week ago," said a leading pork packer to the Canadian Grocer's reporter yesterday, when questioned as to the condition of the market. "We're a week nearer the trying holiday season; that's all."

Hogs continue in fairly short supply and anxiety to get them occasioned a rise of 15c. in the price of live hogs. Packers are paying this week $6.40 f.o.b country points Receipts were slightly larger than the week before, not much

The English market has assumed a steady tone and there is a good demand for Canadian products. Prices are unchanged.

There is a good domestic demand for all classes of pork products and supplies are none too large. Short supplies for a long period have prevented any accumulation and the heavy demand from the north country is now on. In the whole line of provisions there was not this week an indication anywhere of a weakening in price and the packers all talked strong. That, of course, is natural. Prices at this time usually decline but the continuance of demand and short stocks are holding things steady as yet. At any rate there is not talk of any further advance. Even at the present high prices good bacon will go far further in feeding a family than the same money's work of fresh meat, and that fact, in part at least, helps to explain the continued demand.

From May to September, Canadian shipments of cheese to England were 150,000 boxes more than for the corresponding period last year, while shipments of butter were 135,000 tubs less. A rise of twopence a pound in the price of butter is probable.

BUTTER—Export demand for butter is very light, prices on the other side having declined, while here, in some cases, they have advanced. Demand is now all for local account, since prices are above an export basis. The local situation will govern matters now for the balance of the season. The demand for home consumption is increasing every year and is becoming quite a factor to be reckoned with towards the end of the season. Local merchants are buying, and are storing some from current receipts for Winter requirements.

CHEESE—The market continues quiet with business restricted. Shipments lately have been very heavy, a lot of early purchases having been going forward, resulting in the current demand being very light. This dullness has had the effect of reducing prices ¼c. all round, but even at the decline demand has not been stimulated. Prices, however, are not expected to decline much further for the best goods, and dealers anticipate firm prices until the close of navigation.

EGGS—Very few eggs are coming in from the country. The receipts are much below the consumption, and dealers have been using cold storage stock. It is thought that holders in the country who have been unwilling to part with their eggs will thus be brought around to pay the prices offered them by city buyers. Meantime good selects bring anything between 22c. and 23c. Good cold storage eggs, which are equal to No. 1, bring 19c.

TORONTO.

PROVISIONS—The demand for pork products keeps up and there is no sign yet of the usual Fall decline in prices. Deliveries of hogs have been so short that stocks have not accumulated. Lard quotations are fractionally higher. Dressed hogs are up a quarter.

GOOD FOR CANADIAN CHEESE.

"I have canvassed the opinion of several large wholesale dealers regarding the condition and quality of Canadian cheese handled by them, and they are unanimous in their praise of this season's shipments," writes P. B. McNamara, Canadian commercial agent at Manchester. "The only feature that mars their serenity is the high price it commands, 61s. to 62s. 6d, which they claim tends to lessen their average profits. One of the largest cheese factors in Cheshire says, that now, and for a series of years, cheese making has paid the producer much better than milk selling, and since the beginning of the present year Cheshire farmers have been realizing 10s. per cwt. more for their cheese than last year. Twenty-five thousand tons are annually made in Cheshire, and in its manufacture 60,000,000 gallons of milk are used. When we consider the large quantity manufactured in this country as well as that shipped from the United States, it speaks volumes in praise of the Canadian products that it appeals to the taste of the public, and commands such a high place in its esteem."

WINE MERCHANT DEAD.

Euclide Mathieu, proprietor of Mathieu, Freres, Montreal wine merchants, is dead. Mr. Mathieu had not been seriously ill until about three days before his death, but from that time he rapidly sank. He was favorably known in commercial circles, having had a lifelong experience in business. He is survived by a wife and four children.

CEREAL AND CONFECTIONERY

Grain Markets are Uninteresting—Millers Busy With an Active Domestic Demand for Flour—Not Much Export Business—Cereal Mills Busy.

Markets are uninteresting this week. There has been a slight advance in Manitoba wheat, barley is firmer and oats are up ½c., but very light business is passing. Winnipeg interests, it is said, are keeping the market up. The domestic flour trade is very brisk. While some flour is moving for export the business is in no way heavy. The cereal mills report a strong domestic demand and some export business.

MONTREAL.

PROFITS IN FLOUR.

Lake of the Woods Milling Co. Annual Meeting—Officers.

On October 3 the annual meeting of the Lake of the Woods Milling Co. was held in Montreal. From statements submitted the profits for the year were shown to be $375,152.13. The board of directors elected follows: Robert Meighen, Hon. Robt. Mackay, Robert Reford F. H. Mathewson, Abner Kingsman, Jas. N. Pyke, R. M. Ballantyne, W. W. Hutchison, Montreal; G. V. Hastings, Winnipeg.

At a later meeting the following officers were appointed for the ensuing year: Robert Meighen, president and managing director; Hon. Robt. Mackay, vice-president; G. V. Hastings, general manager; W. W. Hutchison, eastern manager; F. E. Bray, secretary; F. S. Meighen, treasurer; R. Neilson, assistant secretary; G. H. Kelly general superintendent; W. A. Matheson, manager wheat department; T. G. Cherry, local manager, Keewatin; R. S. Thompson, local manager, Portage la Prairie; N. J. Breen, manager flour department, Winnipeg.

CANADIAN WHEAT IN JAPAN.

Canadian Commercial Agent Alex. MacLean writes from Japan: "Discussing the prospective importing and grinding of wheat in Japan, which some say the new tariff is designed to encourage, a director of a milling company says that his company get wheat at present from the United States. He was well informed as to the quality of Canadian wheat and would like to have it, but under present conditions it 'could be imported only at a loss. Not only from the United States, but from Australia, he could get wheat cheaper than from Canada.' And as it is with wheat, so must it be with flour. The trifle of Alberta flour that last season offered in this market, however, did show that competition would be practicable. Doubtless the now approaching flour season will make another advance in the same direction."

JAPAN'S RICE CROP.

The outlook for the rice crop is cheering not only to the Japanese farmer, but to every business interest in the country, writes Alex. MacLean, Canadian commercial agent at Yokohama. According to the native press, a recent estimate made by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce is that the coming crop will exceed that of last year by over 80,000,000 bushels, representing a money value of about $100,000,000. The year 1904, which is said to be a record year, gave a yield of 255,000,000 bushels; but this season's estimated 274,000,000 bushels is regarded without precedent.

ELECTRIC POWER FOR MILL.

The Brampton Milling Co. are now installing four electric motors, Westinghouse type, to operate their plant. One 50 h.p. for rolls and first floor; one 30 h.p. to operate second and third floors; one 5 h.p. to operate elevator, and one 30 h.p. to operate chopper. They expect to be in running order with electric power by 15th of October, when they will have an up-to-date, modern plant in every respect. The steam plant remains in tact as usual in case of emergency and can be put in operation in thirty minutes.

NOTES.

The C.N.R. will erect two elevators at Vegreville, Alta.

Swain & Co., flour and feed, Portage la Prairie, have sold to H. Shaw.

R. C. Scott, flour and feed, Ninette, is advertising his business for sale.

The name of the Anchor Cereal Co. will be changed to the Anchor Elevator & Warehousing Co.

The Peterboro Cereal Co. has added a homing mill to its plant. It will be in operation about Oct. 15th.

A large grain company is being formed by Senator Jensen, of Nebraska, to erect elevators in Saskatchewan.

Probably 1,000,000 bushels of Canada's wheat exported last year were lost in transit, according to evidence taken by the Grain Commission.

The Peterboro Cereal Co. have received an order from China for three dozen Kkovah jelly, through their demonstration at the T. Eaton Co.

A paragraph in last week's issue stating the appointment of F. A. Verey as local sales agent at Toronto for the Edwardsburg Starch Co., made mention of the former local manager, the late Chas. P. Graham, as "Mr. Campbell." It was an inadvertance.

J. N. Christie, representing Wm. Galbraith & Son, Montreal, was in Toronto this week on his way home from a trip to the north shore. Mr. Christie said the hay crop on Manitoulin Island was so poor that many farmers will have to sell their stock. He found business very active in the north.

C. E. Kyle, of Toronto, who was in Preston Springs, Ont., with Mrs. Kyle last week, stepped off a car in the dark. It was standing on a bridge and Mr. Kyle fell 10 feet into the river. A sprained ankle, a ducking and a ruined suit of clothes resulted.

Alex. Curry, one of the oldest and most prominent residents of Innisfail, Alta., died there on September 25. He was in his 62nd year and had been in business with his brother, S. G. Belair and George Britain, Montreal, have been incorporated under the name of the John Meldrum Grain & Produce Company, to take over the business of J. E. Belair. The capital of the firm is $20,000, and the head office will be in Montreal.

The United States Pure Food Commission has forbidden the use of mineral blueing substances in bleaching sugar, and as a consequence the people of the United States may soon be using sugar of a distinctly yellowish shade. The sugar chemists claim that the process is merely purification, and therefore quite allowable, but the commission cannot see it in that light.

A very neat booklet has been issued by the Terminal Warehouse & Cartage Co., Montreal, giving particulars about their splendid new building, which has just been completed. The reading matter is set forth in clear, bold type, and gives pointers to merchants on shipping. It is not every merchant who considers the advantages of shipping ex-warehouse. Several excellent engravings illustrate the little work.

James B. Campbell, of the Acme Can Works, Montreal, who accompanied the C.M.A. on the western excursion, has returned. This was Mr. Campbell's first trip to Winnipeg and he is greatly pleased with the modern method of hustling and the general prosperity there is in Winnipeg and other centres. F. G. Miller, formerly with Log Cabin Brand canned goods, is the western agent of the Acme Can Works. Mr. Campbell was kept busy with the trade and reports good orders.

FRUITS, VEGETABLES AND FISH

Canadian Fruit Crop, Except Apples, About Ended—The Lemon Crop—Large Sized Fruit will be Scarce—California Orange Outlook

As another Canadian fruit crop wanes trade interest turns again to foreign markets. The first shipment of new Mesuma lemons are just about leaving Naples and will arrive about the first week in November. The latest reports from Italy indicate very little rain, with the result that the size of lemons are running smaller than usual. The outlook is that large sized lemons will be scarce. Orders recently placed for 300's have been turned down.

Practically all the lemons consumed in Canada come from the Mediterranean. California is increasing its output, but it is held here that the California fruit is inferior both in keeping quality and in flavor to the Italian. The trees of Sicily sink their roots sometimes to a depth of 45 feet into crevices of the limestone rocks. In California the soil is sandy and the roots spread out to get the moisture.

The demand for lemons does not cease with the passing of Summer's heat. Cooling in Summer, warming in Winter; there's nothing better for a cold in its incipient or advanced stages than a hot lemonade. The lemon trade is nearly as heavy in Winter as in Summer.

The California orange crop, according to recent reports, is likely to be less than last year. There will, though, it is said, be an equal number of boxes for shipment, indicating that while not so many the oranges will be larger. They will begin to arrive here in November.

The Mexican oranges, too, will put in an appearance about the middle of November. The crop is reported 25 per cent. below last year's with the demand 25 per cent. heavier.

The cranberry season opened with a derangement among the growers. That was adjusted. The price at the shipping point has advanced $1 in four days.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS — Dealers report good business for this season. Prices have fluctuated considerably since last week, but there are no startling changes to announce. Canteloupes, western melons and Canadian plums are out of the market. New figs are quoted 9 1-2c to 15c., according to quality. Dealers report a large demand for bananas, which is unusual at this season of the year. A great deal of this trade comes from the grocers, which augurs well for the future of this fruit. Lemons are a little lower this week, while oranges are unchanged.

VEGETABLES—Business in vegetables is reported as being very good. Demand has been good in some lines while there has not been much trade passing in others. Potatoes are the most interesting line at present; the market for them has been going first this way and then that in such a manner that nobody seems to know where it is. Quotations from 80c. to 90c. a bag are from 10c. to 20c. lower than last week, but are likely to change at any time. Tomatoes have advanced as has also lettuce. Imported cucumbers will be on the market shortly. Supplies of Canadian are almost nil.

FISH—Oysters continue of particular interest in this market. Considerable trade has been done in this line since the opening of the season. Malpecques are in good demand. Prices are well maintained. Gaspe salmon is quoted again this week, 16c. being asked. No. 1 N. S. herring is also on the list. Dealers are asking $5 a barrel. Salt herring is lower this week. In fresh fish the feature is the advance of the 3c. in halibut. Supplies are not large. Lake fish is in fairly good supply, while haddock are rather scarce. Stocks of fresh smoked fish are arriving daily. Prices show no very great changes.

FRUIT—The feature of the market this week is a rapid advance in the price of cranberries. In four days it went up a dollar a barrel at the shipping point. The fruit market here will probably close this week as the volume of fruit now moving can be handled at the warehouses of the various firms. The Ontario fruit crop, except apples, is now pretty well gathered. The demand for bananas is rather better and the market is firm. Melons are done. Considerable quantities of grapes are arriving, but the market appears to absorb everything readily.

VEGETABLES—Potatoes are plentiful and lower. Jobbers profess to be handling only New Brunswick Delawares. The blight, it is said, is so bad in Ontario spuds this year that it is not satisfactory handling them. The New Brunswick stock is very fine quality. Sweet potatoes are plentiful, of fine quality, and the price is a little easier. Green corn is practically done. Otherwise the situation is about the same as it was.

DISCUSSED TAX PROBLEMS.

Council of the Montreal Board of Trade —New Members.

There was a meeting of the council of the Montreal Board of Trade last week. The question of provincial taxation was dealt with at some length. The board objects to the taxes levied upon extra provincial corporations, and upon travelers representing firms having headquarters outside the province.

A letter from the Winnipeg board of Trade, which was read, was to the effect that the Winnipeg board endorsed the Montreal Board of Trade in their action in reference to this matter.

New members admitted were: Char. H. Vinnells, of Davies, Limited, proposed by Peter Laing; Charles E. Slater, of the Slater Shoe Co., proposed by J. J. McGill, and Alphonse Lemieux, steamship agent, proposed by Thomas Harling. Vice-president Geo. Caverhill was in the chair, and the following members were present: B. Austin, C. B. Esdaile, John R. Binning, Geo. L. Cains, Duncan A. Campbell, Geo. A. Kohl, Peter Lyall, J. L. McCulloch, J. J. McGill, Alex. Ramsay, Farquhar Robertson.

NEW FACTORY OPENED.

A new factory has been opened by the Imperial Syrup Co., of Vancouver, at the corner of Sutherland and Charles streets in Winnipeg. In future all their orders for the trade of Manitoba and the Northwest will be filled from this centre. From Vancouver cane sugar will be shipped to Winnipeg. Molasses will be shipped there direct from New Orleans, while maple syrups will be sent from Montreal.

Wm. Koch, for many years connected with the Montreal office, has been appointed manager of the new factory at Winnipeg.

NEW CHANNEL OPEN.

Hon. Robert Mackay was re-elected president of the Montreal Harbor Commission at a meeting held last week. Robert Bickerdike was re-elected acting president of the commission. Announcement was made by the chief engineer of the Harbor Commission that the new 30-foot channel through St. Mary's Current from Victoria pier to Longueil Bar is now completed. The new channel will be found of much use to the larger boats.

BUSINESS INCREASING.

The business of John Meldrum & Co., Montreal, is rapidly growing larger, the latest indication being the formation of a limited company in connection with the present firm, to carry on the potato end of the business. The new company is capitalized at $20,000, of which over $12,000 has been subscribed. The principals in the company are John Meldrum, E. Belair and F. Patterson. The company has taken over another potato concern and will this season devote particular attention to this line.

EFFECTIVE ADVERTISING

The Editor-Clerk—Running a Store Paper—How it is Gotten Out—Story of how One was Managed—A Sample Ad—Casual Advertising.

THE EDITOR CLERK.

I'm an editor now. You probably wouldn't have expected that of a clerk in a general store. Well, a fellow never knows what honors he will have put upon him if he sticks to his job and works hard. We've started a store paper and I'm Johnny-on-the-spot. I run it. You see our business has grown a great deal and we are branching out all the time. On that account and because the boss thought that I was getting so much on hand running the advertising that I didn't do much else, he made me let all my work go except fixing up the windows and writing the advertising.

The Suggestion.

I suggested starting a store paper a good while ago but he wouldn't stand for it. He said that the regular newspapers were good enough for him and he guessed that if I kept our space in those filled up with good stuff, it would make all the advertising that we'd need for a while.

Well, I didn't say much more then, but this Fall I tackled him again about it and he wanted to know what made me so keen for a store paper. I told him that we were using as big space in the newspapers as there was any use of having and that I was writing as good ads as I could. That means that if we kept on doing so, that was about the best we could do for the papers. If we wanted to bear on heavier yet, we would have to take up some other form of advertising.

Rounding Up.

I thought that we could say a good many more interesting things about our goods than people would read in the papers, and besides there were a good many people out in the surrounding country that didn't get the papers Their money is as good as anybody's and we might as well be getting it. Then I said that there are a lot of people right in town who belong to a class by themselves and will give more attention to something special that comes right to them by mail than they ever will to a newspaper ad. That's true, too. The newspaper is the best, but it isn't the only medium for store advertising, not by a jugful.

The Decision.

The upshot of it all was that we started a little paper on our own hook. The boss had some idea that it might be better to buy one of these ready-made affairs that gives you a page of your own ads and the rest "boiler plate" stuff about "A Thousand Household Hints," "How to be Beautiful," etc., etc. I told him that if he was going to run a paper, it ought to be his paper and he ought to have the say about what would go into it as long as he was to be responsible for it. And it seemed to me that maybe we wouldn't be satisfied with just that page of advertising. We might want more. Anyway, I showed him that these ready-made advertising schemes, papers or anything else, are made up to fit anybody, and of course they are like a suit of clothes would be that was made to fit any one who might try it on, it wouldn't fit any one at all.

Gaining the Editorship.

I got him to let me run that paper to suit myself. He said I could try it and if the first edition didn't suit him when it was done, it would go into the fire and I would lose my job as editor. That just suited me because I'd been getting a great bump on myself lately and thought I knew pretty near all there was to be known.

The Paper.

I went to work on the paper. I planned to issue it every two months at first. I had the printer get up a special heading for the sheet and I was going to make it eight pages. Well, it came up to a week of the time when we were going to get it out and the copy wasn't all ready. I sat up two nights pretty nearly all night and managed to get it so that it was just the way I wanted it. Then I took it to the printer and had a proof made.

I was so proud of the way it looked that I thought I'd show it to the old man without waiting until the edition was printed.

A Criticism.

I took it in and handed it to him and sat down for him to look it over. He looked down the first page, then the second and so on until he had read it through. Then he handed it back to me and said:

"Is this the paper?"

"It's the proof of it," I answered.

"I'm glad it's no worse," said he. "I'm glad the paper is no worse and I'm glad it's only a proof. It won't cost as much to tear this up as it would to tear up a whole edition."

"What's the matter with it?" I asked.

"Why, that's not a paper," he said. "That's nothing but a four-page dodger."

Then it struck me what was the trouble and he was right. I felt pretty cheap. I had made it all advertisements but two columns and they were some jokes that I cut out of an almanac.

The New Order.

I asked him if I lost my position when I hadn't got the whole edition printed yet and he said not. I went out and postponed the day of publication. Then I set about collecting clippings from the magazines and newspapers. When I had a lot of good, interesting stuff I went to work and arranged it through the paper, alternating it with advertisements and generally running the middle of the three columns all this kind of stuff. I had short anecdotes, little squibs of verse, items of general interest and quite a bit of local information. It was really interesting reading and then I made the headings of the advertisements a little more catchy.

"All's Well," Etc.

I didn't get this set up and a proof made until I had showed the boss the copy. This time he said it was all right. He doesn't know a great deal about advertising, but he's long on common sense. I went ahead and got out the paper like the revised copy and I've been getting out one every two months since. It has paid us well. We can't tell just exactly how much, but we've had a good many calls for goods advertised nowhere else.—Brains.

HARRY RANAHAN'S AD.

For a 35-line ad the one shown on this page is very effective. The compositor used excellent taste and judgment, with the result that the ad has a full measure of distinctiveness.

The matter is pointed, clear in construction and appealing in tone.

London has first-rate grocery advertisers.

CASUAL ADVERTISING.

By "casual" advertising is meant the stay-out-to-day and go-in-to-morrow-or-next-week kind that some men indulge in. It may also be termed "spasmodic" advertising. It is the kind that no man can afford, even though his business is in great measure dependent on seasons. Of course, the ice cream man will not do a heavy business in the Winter, nor the fur dealer in July. Yet neither has a good reason for ever stopping his advertising—ice cream is used to some extent all the year round, and the fur advertisement seen in midsummer may help to solve a Christmas problem. Clothing, and shoes, and dry goods, and groceries, and so on sell all the time — people have to have them all the time.

Keeping Name Before Public.

Then, "keeping one's name before the public" is necessary to genuine success in trade. "Genuine success"—is it a new phrase? Is there any kind of success but success? There are kinds of success, just as there are degrees of heat. It is not hot when it is merely warm, although water will not freeze. And the fact that a business does not stop, or that its owner gets a living from it, does not prove it to be genuinely successful. Genuine success in business consists in getting out of it all there is in it—up to the measure of one's limitations.

Opportunities Unlimited.

It is true that only a few men see it that way. But Marshall Field did—John Wanamaker does—and there have been and are others. There was only one Marshall Field ! And there is only one John Wanamaker ! Know why ? They saw, where others could not or would not. Absolutely, there is no limit to the amount of business one man may do. There may be an apparent limit in his home town—but the world is wide.

Dissatisfaction a Virtue.

A fair degree of prosperity is not an actual gauge of genuine success. He who is doing well might very often be doing better. By and through advertising, if he is not an advertiser ; by and through more advertising, if he is already an investor in the great safe bank that never passes a dividend. Sociologists say there is no hope of helping those who cannot—or will not—see that they need help. And the business man who is satisfied with his business as it is, is not likely to have a larger business. Dissatisfaction and unrest must precede every rise to better things. Also, there must be a belief that there are better things. And then there must be "doing." Dissatisfaction and unrest will not accomplish anything of themselves, and it is only when they lead to action that they are at all worth while. Intelligent action is meant. Not merely doing for the sake of keeping mind and body engaged. Not advertising for the sake of having something in the paper—it must be thoughtful, intelligent advertising.

The Reasons.

The man who wants to do more business—who is capable of doing more business—will advertise. He will advertise regularly, even though not as largely at all seasons. Some of the reasons why he will are in the paragraphs that follow : Casual advertising costs too much in dollars and cents. The now-and-then advertiser pays more for space each insertion than the regular patron of the newspapers. It brings no permanent results. Over and over it has been proved that trade secured through advertising has been lost when the advertising was discontinued. Incidentally, the chief reason for its loss was that "the other fellow" went on advertising.—Selected.

A Friend——Of Mine

went into a grocery store the other day and asked for a 10-cent cigar.

The grocer brought out a box of Pharaoh.

My friend seeing other cigars in the case asked the grocer why he selected Pharaoh cigars when he (the buyer) mentioned no brand.

The grocer's reply was "Biggest part of my trade is Pharaoh and Pebble. I carry other lines for a few customers. But when smokers do not mention a brand, I find in nine cases out of ten they come back for Pebble for 5-cents and Pharaoh for 10-cents; hence I win a steady customer."

FREIGHTS AND CHARTERS

Apple Shipments Increasing—Large Consignment of Flour in Sacks to Various South African Ports—British Demand for Flour Irregular.

Trade during the past week in shipping circles has been normal. Outgoing boats have been well loaded in almost every instance with various Canadian products destined for the United Kingdom and other parts of the world.

Shipments of butter during the past week were fairly large. Demand from the other side could not be said to have been more than fair, owing no doubt to the high prices ruling.

Cheese exported was large in quantity. Exporters have been very busy filling their engagements. A great deal of what has gone out comprises orders taken the previous week, but which were not to be shipped for a fortnight. The high figures asked for cheese while keeping down trade to a certain extent, does not seem to effect conditions as much as one would think.

Inquiry for flour from British and other ports has varied, being good at times, and poor other periods. It is in sacks that most of the flour going out is contained. A recent boat destined for South African ports carried over 20,000 sacks for different points. England is importing more or less flour, but demand from the Old Country cannot be called large.

Grain is beginning to move out in quantities, and some good shipments have been made during the past few weeks

Apples are rapidly gaining in exportation. Ocean going vessels leaving the port lately have nearly all carried consignments of good size to European ports.

Hay shipments have not been large, owing to the state of the markets.

There has been practically no movement either up or down in the level of the water in the harbor lately, so that the situation in this respect is unchanged.

Rates this week show no alterations.

The Bray Head, for Belfast, cleared with a general cargo on October 4. The Canada and the Hungarian sailed from Montreal on October 5, the former for Liverpool and the latter for London. Both boats carried general cargoes.

REPUTATION OF 150 YEARS.

Purnell Webb & Co., Bristol, England, Continue to Grow Bigger.

Purnell, Webb & Co., of Bristol, Eng., rank among the oldest brewers of malt vinegar in the kingdom. Their reputation has been maintained for 150 years and trade has grown accordingly, so that recent extensions to their already large plant have been necessary in order to keep pace with orders.

The works are up-to-date in every department, and a recently published article in Grocery on the various processes employed, makes most interesting reading. Briefly stated, these are as follows:

The grain, received in barges, is turned into hoppers and screened; it then passes into the mashing machine to the mash basin; hot liquor from the boiling vats is admitted at the same time, and in a few hours it becomes sweet wort. This wort is then drained off, and pumped into the cooling room, whence it is carried on into the fermenting rounds. Then follows the acidifying process, which frequently extends over three weeks. Several vats are used for this purpose, the vinegar being passed from one to the other by means of pumps. When this process is completed to the satisfaction of the examiners, the vinegar is placed in casks for shipment.

One point in particular which should tend to perfection, is that spring water, obtained in the Mendip Hills, is used in the making.

The several qualities of Purnell's vinegar are always kept at fixed standards. Each cask bears a signature of purity, and a guarantee stands at the foot of each invoice.

The company manufactures besides vinegar several well-known brands of pickles and condiments, such as "B.V." sauce, "P.W.," Worcestershire and "Ye Olde Devonshire." In the success which has attended this department, the quality of the vinegar used has of course had much to do, and this can only be taken as another proof of its excellence.

ELECTIONS IN MONTREAL

Retail Grocers Choose Their Officers— Warmly Contested Presidential Election —A. Laniel Chosen—What He will Aim to do.

There was a great meeting of the Montreal Retail Grocers' Association last Thursday evening. The occasion was the annual election of officers, and the hall at 270 St. Catherine street east, was taxed to its capacity to hold all who were present. There must have been between one hundred and one hundred and fifty grocers and those connected with the grocery trade, present. And the hall was not large enough. In his opening address President Daoust, who occupied the chair, remarked that ordinarily the hall was too large, but on this occasion it was far to small.

Two grocers had been nominated for the presidency. These were A. Laniel and J. A. Maynard. From the first it was seen that there was going to be a very closely contested election, which was further evidenced by the expressions heard on all sides.

A. Laniel,
President Montreal Retail Grocers' Association.

On entering the hall one thought at once of the Stock Exchange in session. everybody was excited. A circular distributed which was signed "A Grocer Devoted to the Interests of the Association." This contained some hot stuff and was evidently prepared with the end in view of advocating the interests of Mr. Laniel.

The meeting was called to order about nine o'clock, and after a little preliminary business, during the course of which much impatience was exhibited, the election was proceeded with.

The Scrutineers.

Considerable time was spent in choosing scrutineers who would be sufficiently disinterested in the result of the election, in the opinion of both parties, to act satisfactorily. N. Chartrand and H. Poirier were finally decided upon and both of them gave entire satisfaction.

Candidates' Addresses.

The candidates for the presidency were given five minutes each to address the meeting. Mr. Laniel was called upon first, but only spoke for two minutes, asking that he be allowed the other three minutes afterward. He explained that he did not expect to be called upon, and wanted time to think of something to say. Mr. Maynard then took the floor for his five minutes. He spoke of what he intended to do if elected—to work for lower business taxes, fight against the peddlers and generally work for the good of the association. Mr. Maynard spoke for rather more than five minutes until forced to discontinue by repeated cries of "Time's up," by the impatient electors. Then Mr. Laniel was given his remaining three minutes, which he used to the utmost advantage, explaining just what his policy would be if the grocers saw fit to honor him with election to the president's chair. He was loudly applauded when he sat down.

Voting then commenced amid much excitement and loud talking. When the ballots were counted it was announced that Mr. Laniel had been elected. By what majority it was not stated, but it is understood to have been a fairly large one.

In a short address Mr. Laniel thanked the grocers for honoring him with their confidence.

Other Officers.

The remaining officers were elected as follows: Vice-president, J. A. Dore (by acclamation); E. P. Guillemette; secretary, A. Sarazin (by acclamation); treasurer, H. Laniel.

The retiring president, P. Daoust, made a short speech in which he thanked the members for their goodness to him in honoring him by election to the office of president two years in succession.

Retiring President Appreciated.

P. Bruneau, the ex-treasurer, in a short but forcible address said many complimentary things about Mr. Daoust and the interest he had always taken in the association and the grocery trade generally, especially during the time he occupied the president's chair. All of what he said was heartily assented to by the meeting.

All the new officers are good men, well qualified for the duties apportioned them.

Speaking to The Canadian Grocer after the meeting, Mr. Laniel said that his programme would be a simple one. "I will look after the interests of the association and the grocery trade generally to the best of my ability. I will do my best to secure increased membership for the association; will make a stiff fight against the pedlar nuisance, try to make arrangements with the wholesale trade which will result in the grocers getting back the one per cent. discount of which they were deprived lately. I will do my best to reduce the business and water taxes, and work along lines which will bring the greatest benefit to the retail grocery trade."

The New President.

A. Laniel, who has just been elected president of the Montreal Retail Grocers' Association, is known to nearly everybody in grocery circles in Montreal.

Born in St. Genevive, Jacques Cartier County, forty-three years ago, he came to Montreal at the early age of seven, and has resided in the city ever since.

His first connection with the grocery business was with his father, M. Laniel, who kept a store at the corner of Fulford and Albert streets for many years. During the time he was working under the eye of the elder Laniel he gained much experience which has since stood him in good stead.

P. Daoust,
Retiring President Montreal Retail Grocers' Association.

When he was twenty-three he took over his father's business, having entire charge of the store.

It was necessary to move from the old store about ten years ago, and Mr. Laniel rented a store at 193 McCord street. He bought this property in 1900 and erected the present large store there.

His trade is mostly among the Irish people, he being located in the Irish section of Montreal. He has three clerks to assist him and carries a full line of groceries, wines, liquors and fruits.

Mr. Laniel has been a member of the association for ten years and has always worked hard at picnics and on other occasions, for the welfare of the members.

Little Sermons on Advertising

Delivered by John C. Kirkwood.

INSTRUCTIVE ADVERTISING.

When a man opens his mouth to talk business, he should say something. To merely mention his name; or to show a picture of his factory, and say "That's my factory;" or to recite a list of the things he has to sell, isn't likely to sell goods. Think of your salesman going into a man's store and shouting:

"William A. Carter, representing T. Robertson & Co., Tinware, Halifax."

Do you think he will get much of an order? Why, he has not even asked for business.

Yet one sees many advertisements that do not say a single thing except to state the name and address of the advertiser.

Or again, suppose William A. Carter should say, in addition: "Tin pails, coffee pots, pie-plates, and strainers," would it improve things much?

The salesman who wants to sell goods nowadays has to have more than a name and a price list. There are too many people calling on a man in these times to coax for orders, for the order to go to the man with no better reason or an order than his name, his house's name, and a price list. The merchant likes to buy from the friendly salesman, the man who can take time to cultivate his favor, who shows his interest in the merchant's welfare. Merchants are human. They like to have a hand-shaking acquaintance with the men who sell them goods. And merchants are business men, as well; they want to be assured of the quality, the value, the selling-power, and the selling points of the goods they are asked to buy.

The advertisement is a salesman and should talk like a salesman. It can contain a hand-shake; it can show an interest in the merchant's business; it can even tell a good story, if it seems worth telling. And it must get down to business, it must persuade, and quote, and explain. It may have to do some arguing. It may have to show the merchant how to sell the goods, teach him about the goods, and thus fit him and his staff to talk the line intelligently and forcefully to the consumer.

Such advertisements are read, because they are interesting and instructive; because they contain "meat." They are not wishy-washy, empty, dull; they are full of life, and a merchant responds to such advertisements. He cannot help but yield to their power. He may be slow to respond, but sooner or later he will be convinced that the house that has such an evident interest in him; that "talks business"; that quotes figures and helps him sell the goods, is the house he wishes to buy from.

Such advertising pays both the advertiser and the retailer. Once in a while one comes across a firm that tries to do advertising in this instructive style by pamphlets, circulars, booklets, sent under cover of a wrapper. This way may be effective, but if not backed up by advertising in the merchant's trusted newspaper, pamphlets, circulars, and booklets are likely to miss their mark. A merchant wants the houses he deals with to talk to him in his trade newspaper. He subscribes to this newspaper for news helpful to him in his business, advertising news included. And the firm who neglect to use this medium, or who misuse the space they may have engaged, are failing to use an influence powerful, persuasive, and profitable.

Printer's ink is a good salesman if well used.

The Turned-Down Corners

Here and there in the Ledger of Life you have turned down the corner of a page for remembrance sake—you'd forget something if the turned-down corner wasn't there.

To-day, turn down a corner deep and wide to remember this one sure fact : "Quality is remembered long after price is forgotten." Every time you come to that particular page—remember. Every time you try to sell inferior quality, think of the turned-down corner—what it stands for, and what it really means to your success.

"Taylor's" Candied and Drained Peels

Made in England from the best Corsican peels only. Prepared from finest selected whole fruits—not from fruit skins from which the essential oil has been extracted. Highest quality. Always the same.

Caught, cured and canned right at the water's edge—not re-shipped and re-handled before packing. No bone, dirt nor slime ever gets into the "Thistle" Brand. Open a can yourself for the most convincing proof—they are all right at all times. Always Genuine Haddie only.

It works this way. A customer is attracted by the handsome Old Homestead label. There is something in the name that appeals to her and she buys a can or so to try it. She is delighted with the trial. She finds Old Homestead Brand superior in every way to any canned goods she has used before.

She comes back for more. Trust a woman to tell her neighbors. Your canned goods trade grows apace and with it your general trade with customers who have called for Old Homestead Brand goods

RAKWANA

Is a Tea which every Grocer can confidently recommend to his customers.

The quality of Tea people use should have their most careful consideration. Every grocer and storekeeper knows that it does not pay to handle inferior grades of Tea, and in these days when there are so many different brands being offered on the market, it may sometimes be difficult for the purchaser to decide which to stock to please his customers. In this case the most reliable course is to sell only Teas which you will always be able to guarantee as Teas of first-class quality. Every grocer in Nova Scotia stocks

RAKWANA

Because they know it is a good seller, and that the demand is steadily increasing all over the province. QUALITY, FLAVOR and STRENGTH are the principal features of this renowned Blend.

As we are desirous of introducing this Tea to the West, we are prepared to give grocers of approved business standing, SOLE CONTROL of RAKWANA TEA for their district or town.

We feel sure that you will find this Tea a trade winner.

THE SIGN OF GOOD FISH

WHEN a man goes to buy a ring or a watch chain he looks to see the stamp of quality. It is this which determines in his mind the value.

WE have adopted the above sketch as our trade mark and just as quickly as we can get around to it, we shall place it on every package of Fish put up at our different stations. We want you to examine it closely and to fasten this one fact in your mind:

None but the very best quality of Fish

The Brand of Quality

The country is growing at such a rate the demand for Canned Goods has been in excess of the supply. This very condition is apt to make Canneries careless of their output, and there is need of more discrimination in buying, if grocers are to be sure of their trade. We claim for the a higher standard of quality than is usually considered necessary. The finest of Fruits and Vegetables gathered at the right stage of ripeness and packed fresh from the field under the most careful conditions, warrant the statement that the "Essex" Company's goods will give a larger measure of satisfaction to your customers than any other within your reach.

MORE THAN A VICTORY

The success of Ceylon Teas on the Canadian market has been more than a victory. It has been a complete rout for competitors.

First the Ceylon blacks were introduced. The trade were doubtful. But the men who had faith and specialized on Ceylon blacks are now the leaders of the tea trade.

The Consumer Decided that Ceylon blacks were incomparably the best teas made and would have no other.

Ceylon Greens are meeting with similar success. All along the line they are supplanting their rivals. The grocer who looks to the future will push Ceylon greens, because they fill the requirments of the Canadian public, are better teas and better value, and are indeed

You remember what Bacon once said: "A wise man will make more opportunities than he finds." The grocer who never has to refuse a customer a widely advertised staple like Windsor Salt (absolutely clean, white, dry), creates opportunity. He gets the trade that his competitor looses.

QUALITY AND DEMAND | "Go Hand in Hand"

"SALADA" Ceylon Tea is as indispensable as our daily bread. It's Name and Fame is household throughout the width and breadth of the entire American Continent.

It's "SALADA" for Breakfast, Dinner, Supper, for Social 5 o'clocks, and every other time and place where a cup of Tea "In Perfection" is appreciated.

It's dominating influence is alone due to its distinctive and mysterious character which the connoisseur at once detects as the true "SALADA" idea of Tea Quality.

It pays every grocer well to push the sale, as the margin of profit is good and actual. Besides this, it has a none too scanty reverence for prolonged acquaintanceship with a dealer's shelves. 'Tis better thus.

"SALADA" is controlled and operated by the Largest Handlers of Ceylon Teas (Black and Green) in America. Write for terms, "Salada," Toronto, Montreal

HOW A GROCER CAN IMPROVE HIS BUSINESS

AND ENLARGE HIS PROFITS

A Travelers Essay by A. H. Lawson.

Some weeks ago The Canadian Grocer invited the conmercial travelers in the grocery and allied lines to enter a competition for the best article on how a retail grocer can improve his business and enlarge his profits. After careful consideration the judges awarded the 1st prize to Mr. Lawson and his article is here produced.

Many retail grocers to-day are asking this important question, and I can assure The Grocer that their kindness in bringing up the subject will be greatly appreciated. The very fact of the matter being discussed in the columns of this valuable paper will be the means of attracting the attention of the trade generally to the all important question, "How can I improve my business and percentage of profit?" and in consequence will be the means of putting new life and enthusiasm into many a grocer who has not been giving the matter due consideration.

Improvement, as a rule, can be accomplished by a determination on the part of the grocer to place himself in the front rank of his calling. Let his aim be high, continually striving to reach the mark, and good results are bound to follow.

A thorough knowledge of the business is essential; many are working under the disadvantage of a lack of it, who would be able otherwise to increase their trade and profits very materially. They should be more persistent in acquiring the knowledge they lack.

A trade journal such as The Canadian Grocer is a constant source of useful information, and should be a powerful factor in assisting every grocer to improve his system of doing business, increasing trade and enlarging profits. The retail grocer of the twentieth century cannot afford to be without it; it is published exclusively in the interests of the trade, and it would seem like shutting out the light and keeping in the dark to not take advantage of its valuable contents.

Sell Good Goods.

Generally, business can be improved by more careful consideration of the quality of the goods handled. A poor article at a low price will, in the end, prove detrimental to the seller, while a good article at a fair profit will be much more satisfactory to the purchaser, and will be more likely to secure future trade. As an illustration, take the line of currants, and by handling the best grades the merchant is always sure to obtain his full share of the business, easily outdistancing his rival, who may be pushing cheap currants at a low price. Tea, coffee and spices should at all times be given special attention. The customer is always willing to pay a fair price, providing he gets a good article. You could waste a fortune advertising cheap tea, coffee and spices, but you would be in the end just about where you started, less the fortune, so little would it attract the general public.

A. H. LAWSON.

Mr. Lawson is one of the most successful grocery travelers in Canada. It is 23 years since he ventured on the road scarcely more than a youth after several years in a retail grocery store. He attributes what success he has achieved to hard work and perseverance. He now represents T. Kinnear & Co., Toronto, and was for a couple of years sample room manager for John Sloan & Co. This is Mr. Lawson's first attempt as an essayist and he succeeded by the same methods that have stood him in such good stead as a salesman.

The trade are usually very particular about the quality of sugar they handle, being ever on the alert to secure the same at the right price, in order that they may be able to compete successfully with their neighbor. Profitable lines given equal consideration, instead of being neglected, would be instrumental in greatly improving business, particularly the financial part of it.

Make the Store Attractive.

An attractive store, where the goods are displayed to the best possible advantage, will always be a factor in securing new trade and holding more firmly the patronage of the customers already obtained. A good window display is of the utmost importance, especially in all cities and towns, and cannot be dispensed with without seriously curtailing the volume of business and permitting it to go to more enterprising competitors. A good delivery wagon will contribute its share toward keeping your name before the people; and an additional attraction would be the placing of two nicely printed cards, hung conspicuously from each side of the rig, naming the "special" you are offering for the day or the week. Up-to-date methods must be adopted to place yourself at the top of the ladder.

Little need be said in reference to judicious advertising; that it pays there is not the slightest doubt. We have evidence all around us of successful business men who by this means have attained their present positions.

Public Suspicious of the Price Cutter.

Extensive price cutting is very objectionable, and usually results disastrously, as the public become suspicious of the man who claims to be selling his goods so much below the market price.

Business can be improved by occasionally making a specialty of some particular line. Don't fail to have the article you are placing on sale all that you represent it to be. Everything must be done with the object in view of securing and retaining the confidence of the customer. The grocer should be the best judge as to the class of goods required in his locality, but the policy of handling first-class goods will always prove the most satisfactory and remunerative. Adopt new ideas as far as possible. Doing the same thing year after year will get one into a rut that will eventually stop the progress of the business.

Get Enthusiastic.

Endeavor to become enthusiastic over the business; enthusiasm makes heavy work light.

Tact is a talent which should be cul- will make the business run more smoothly and pleasantly, and minimize or abolish many an obstacle.

The tide of opportunity comes, at some time, to every man, and the ambitious and hopeful one is the best prepared to take advantage of it.

Maintain a spirit of cheerfulness, and the effect will be electrical throughout the entire establishment, and will be most helpful in improving the volume of trade.

Success Depends on System.

Success depends very much upon the system the business is run on. Everything should be done systematically, from the time the door is opened in the morning until it is closed at night. This will insure correctness in the order department, promptness in delivery of goods, and accuracy in keeping the accounts, all of which are very pleasing to a customer. Originality is a good thing in its way, but by adopting an improved system of conducting the business, more time can be devoted to any natural ability in the way of original ideas toward drawing trade.

In buying, always keep a keen eye open for bargains. Watch very carefully market quotations and conditions, local and foreign, and by anticipating requirements considerable extra money can be made. If a grocer buys right he can sell right, and in doing so will gain a reputation that will ever tend to increase the volume of business.

An Eye on Side Lines.

Side lines should not be overlooked. There is a splendid profit in all lines of confectionery, and if properly handled will never fail to bring a large return on the amount of money invested. High grade chocolates of every variety can be sold in surprising quantities in any average grocery store. Sales of confectionery are constantly increasing. Why not get a share of it?

Nearly all lines of groceries are now being put up in packages, and there is much to be said in their favor. The packages are usually attractive, easy to handle, and save time, labor, and loss in weight. There is another side of the question, however, that interests every grocer, and that is, that the profit allowed the retailer by the manufacturer is altogether too limited. Especially is this the case with many cereals. The retail grocers' associations, backed up by the trade generally, could accomplish much in putting these lines on a better paying basis. They have the key to the situation, and all that is required is united action.

Your Own Package Goods.

The idea of the grocer putting up package goods with the firm's own name on them should be adopted as extensively as possible. If the quality is right, the grocer will have no difficulty in building up a nice trade for them. This branch of the business will always prove profitable, and afford an opportunity of advertising lines over which they have full control.

With the improved system of fixtures that are being placed on the market, the grocer should be able to sell more of the bulk goods. The public demands cleanliness, and in this respect the new system should prove entirely satisfactory. It is generally admitted that the bulk article pays a better margin of profit than the package. Consequently, the former should only be replaced by the latter when actually necessary, the exception being the firm's own package.

Keep the financial part of the business well in hand; take all discounts, and with quiet, steady, persistent work the business will surely improve and the profits increase.

The grocery business may seem crowded, but there is plenty of room at the top.

Drove Out Catalogue Houses

A North Dakota merchant contributes the following to the Minneapolis Bulletin with regard to his success in developing a profitable business under somewhat trying conditions:

We began, says he, in the depressing times of 1904. We staked our little all in a poor, run-down bankrupt $6,000 stock of merchandise, for which we paid fifty cents on the dollar and then got the worst of it.

At that time over one-half of the merchandise that came to our town came from catalogue houses direct to the consumer.

The short half that was sold here went out on time and eternity.

This condition of affairs we did not like, but we went to work.

First we prepared a copy for a half-page ad and took it to our printer.

When we asked for a contract for a half-page ad for one year, he fainted away, but soon recovered and gave us figures which caused us to faint.

We closed the deal and have never carried less than a half-page ad in which we vigorously advertised honest goods for honest dollars and one hundred cents worth of goods for every one hundred cents received. For the first five years one part of our ad was made very prominent and ran something like this: "Bring in your bills and let us figure on them. We agree to meet all catalogue house competition or go them one better."

We kept our word although on a few special bills we lost money, while on others we made from a small to a fair profit.

To-day there is not one dollar in one thousand that comes from catalogue houses to the people of our territory.

Other merchants took up the advertising scheme until the publisher increased his paper from a 2x4 to a ten page seven column sheet, and it is brim full of snap shot prices of merchandise from one end to the other.

What chance has a box-car merchant or a department store catalogue in a town where a paper of that kind is printed and circulated!

Besides, we have the satisfaction of knowing that we have made a bloated bondholder of one newspaper publisher.

The secret of our success in merchandising has been strict attention to business, buy for cash, sell for cash, advertise.

A merchant who cannot pay spot cash for his goods would do better to buy or rent a farm. A merchant who cannot say "no" firmly and pleasantly with a smile that will not come off when asked for dubious credit, had better look for a railroad job.

We are a small concern, yet in our twelve years of business our discount account shows a balance on the right side of our ledger of $7,111.79, besides we estimate that we have saved $10,000 by being known as cash buyers, or job lot buyers when we can find the goods we can use at a price."

HEAD FOR FIGURES.

Here's an interesting coffee calculation used by a Philadelphia grocer to advertise his coffee with striking effect. This grocer displays a sign reading: "If one grain of our coffee was placed on the first square of a checker board, two on the second, four on the third, and so on doubling throughout the whole sixty-four squares, the total number arrived at would be 18,446,744,073,551,615 coffee beans, or 7,960,915,394,584,601 pounds of coffee. This would represent 331,704,808,107 car loads, and a freight train to carry it would be 3,957,841,460 miles in length. It would reach around the earth 158,313 times and would extend 42 times the distance between the earth and the sun. The quantity would make 13,374,337,862,902,130 gallons of coffee and would cost at 28 cents a pound $872,407,300,806,397.20. If each person in the country drank three cups daily it would take the entire population of the United States 2,442,801 years to consume it."

ART OF EFFECTIVE WINDOW DRESSING

Ability to dress a window is one of the most valuable qualifications of the grocer or a grocery clerk. It is not more essential than honesty or knowledge of the goods handled, or how to advertise, or the habit of cleanliness and neatness, in some ways not more important than pleasant manners and the capacity of taking an interest in customers, but it is a class with all these.

A grocer would not expect to succeed if he and his clerks came to the store in the clothes of a coal heaver or an oiler. But people see his window before they see him. The window is constantly crying out to the people who pass, "See what manner of store this is." It is a standing advertisement and for the grocer that knows how to treat it the most profitable single means of publicity he has.

Why, then, do so many grocers neglect it? A great many would plead they hadn't time. If they appreciated its possibilities they would make time, just as they make time to write advertisements and send out accounts. But there are a lot of men who are not so busy and might be a lot busier if they would attend to the window. There are merchants who stand around wondering why trade is so dull, when they should be devising means of sharpening it up. The window is the thing nearest to hand; try that.

Then there is the multitude of commonly dressed windows. In passing them one is aware they are grocery windows but they excite no interest. No one would ever stop to look at them. This class of window may be divided into many groups. There are the windows the grocer is using as a storeroom for bulk goods, there are windows with too little in, others with too much. In many the arrangement looks like confusion, in others colors are used without any conception of color effects. The list is too long.

Ordinarily, one line at a time is enough to advertise in a window—dried fruit, cereals, canned goods, biscuits, confectionery, or whatever the choice may be. By this plan it is very much easier to secure an effect. The work is less, and that makes it the easier to change often. A window should be dressed at least once a week.

GIBBONS BROS., FIRST PRIZE.

Not many more attractive windows could be found than those of Gibbons Bros., illustrated in the accompanying picture and awarded first prize in the competition last Christmas. They are well filled, yet appear well ordered. Mr. Gibbons, whose picture is shown in the doorway, evidently believes in price tickets, neat and not too large. The writer is inclined to the view that they add to the interest and detract nothing from the appearance of the windows. Curiously, they appear to be confined to one window; perhaps he was trying an experiment.

The trimmer of the windows is shown at the extreme left of the picture, J. M. Thom. He has had a pretty thorough experience in the grocery business and got at the window by chance, someone sick or something. He had been with Gibbons Bros. only six months when he dressed these windows and for two years before that had been driving for another firm. Aside from doing his weekly stunt he thought little of window dressing until he won a first in this competition and naturally then thought he perhaps had some ability and became an enthusiast. It brought him some notoriety and now he is dressing a hardware, a tobacco and a confectionery window in the vicinity.

SECOND PRIZE WINDOW.

J. E. Pelan, of St. Thomas, Ont., won the second prize in the Christmas competition with a window of distinctive merit. The striking feature of the display is the eleven boxes of oranges that form the background. The foreground consists of two rows of wicker baskets, six in a row. In the front row the two centre baskets contain raisins and currants flanked by candied peels and the other four boxes, two on either side, contain candies. The second row of baskets contain fruit and candies. At the wall end of the window is a pyramid of handsomely labelled canned goods. The fan, flag, and other decorative aids are in good taste.

THEY HAVE GOOD WINDOWS.

Here are the names of a few of the Ontario grocers who give special attention to their windows: J. O. Perry, Orillia; C. Beck, Penetang; Wm. Rourke, Penetang; Wallbridge & Clark, Belleville; Mathison Bros., Whitby; Geo. Ruppell, Elmira; Wm. Metcalf & Co., Berlin; Podgett & Co., Toronto Junction; J. J. Hatley, Orillia; S. M. Wariner, Stouffville; A. C. Nairn, Goderich; Walsh Bros., Stratford; R. H. Robinson, Orangeville; E. Berwick & Co., Shelburne; McClarty Bros., Owen Sound; Halliday & Stinson, Chesley; J. A. Stewart, Higgins & Son, W. Greaves, F. Dean, W. F. Armitage.

A Montreal Success

"Yes, we have always had very good success with our windows," said J. H. Robertson, of John Robertson & Son, Montreal, when interviewed by The Canadian Grocer, "but we have made it a point to give them special attention. We are situated in a district frequented by all classes of people, and giving attention to our windows by dressing them in a way to bring trade, we are able to catch a great deal of passing business."

John Robertson & Son conduct an up-to-date retail establishment on St. Catherine street west, in the heart of the shopping district.

The Grocer asked how this affected their business.

"Well, it is this way," explained Mr. Robertson. "Being in the dry goods zone, as it were, I guess we are not supposed to do a grocery business. Women, when they go out shopping, do not go with the intention of ordering groceries. This we have found to be the case, but our windows help us out of the difficulty. In our experience we have found that if the window is novel, and at the same time attractive, it will catch the eye of the ladies every time. Consequently it is our aim to so dress the window as to catch the eye of the passerby on first glance. This is half of the battle. The window we have at present is a good example. As you see, it is a tea window. We have a private blend of tea nicely done up in red-wrappered parcels of one pound each. The window is dressed with tea, and only tea, and do you know, we have sold over two thousand pounds of that tea within the last two weeks. And about five hundred pounds of this was disposed of to people whom we had never before seen, purely cash sales attracted by the window. Therefore it is easy to see that if you attract the attention right away, the rest may be taken for granted."

"Do you believe in displaying several lines at once?"

"No, we concentrate our efforts on one class of goods at a time. It is a tea window, a soap window, or a liquor window, as the case may be, but it is never a combination of the three. It does not pay. The idea is to use all the available space to advertise that one certain line. If there is a little room to spare, we put in a few appropriate cards."

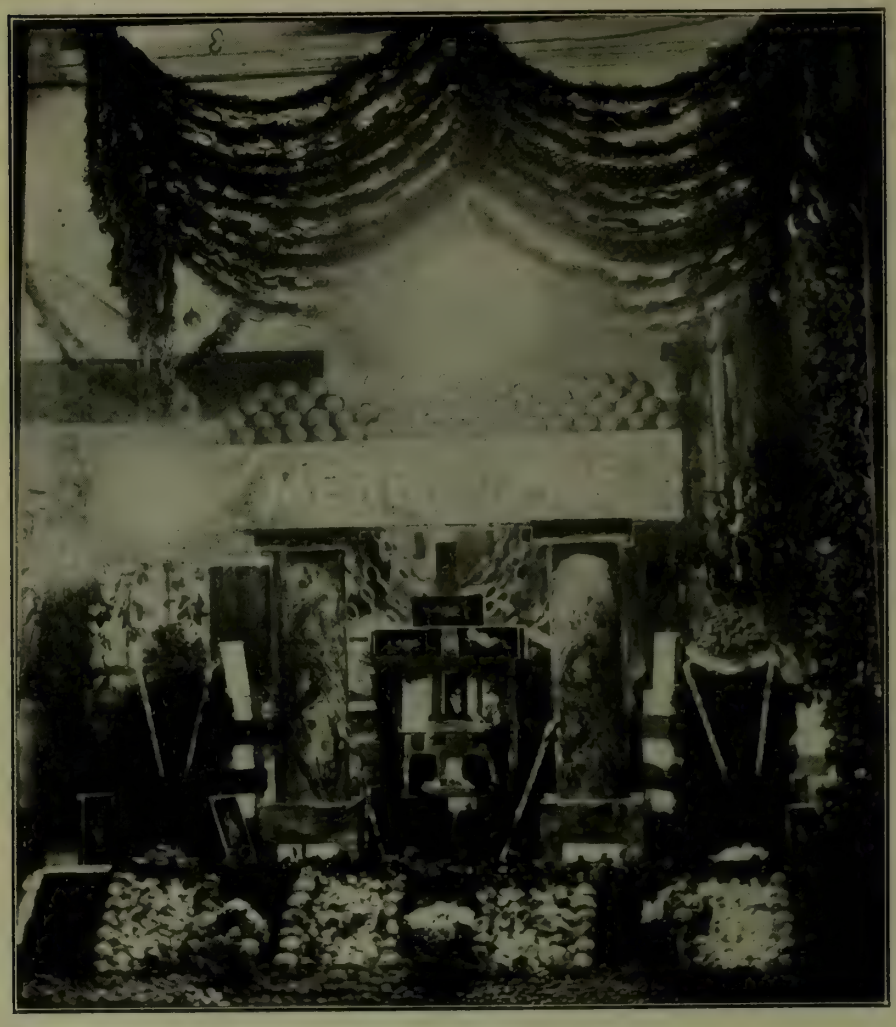
During the warm Summer months Robertson's window was nicely dressed on different occasions to resemble a miniature mountain. There were streams of running water, green grass and all the accessories. This was a liquor window. Another very well dressed window was one recently made which advertised Surprise soap.

On the whole Robertson's window is, as a rule, one of the most attractive grocery windows in Montreal, reflecting much credit upon the store.



In the Prize Class—Aaron Graeb, Hespeler, Ont.

IN THE WINNING CLASS.

Had there been a third prize in this competition of last Christmas it would have gone to Aaron Graeb, Hespeler, Ont. He submitted photos of two windows here reproduced. The grocery window is undoubtedly a work of great merit. The arch bearing the motto, "Merry Xmas," supported by marbled pillars and surmounted by a low pyramid of fine oranges, is finely and ingeniously conceived. The fruits, peels, nuts, confectionery and decorations that go to fill up the window are very attractive. A good many people might award it second or even first prize. The trimmer of the window was A. Hagmuir, and he probably would be the first to admit the fairness of the criticism that the window was lacking in arrangement. The form and order of it does not impress one. It is faulty in composition. But it is a very attractive window nevertheless and in it Mr. Hagmuir demonstrates splendid possibilities as a window dresser. It bespeaks also an intelligent interest on the part of his employer, Mr. Graeb, the lack of which on the part of employing grocers is to a great extent the cause of so much indifferent window trimming in Canada.

New York Experience

"I have six large windows," said a rising New York grocer recently, "two on the avenue and four on the street. I have watched the displays from time to time and invariably find where one window has been devoted to the displaying of one article, there has been a marked increase in the sale of that article. You have probably seen the display I had of a well known cereal. Up to making the display of it the sales had been only moderate; during the time of display, say two weeks, I sold ten cases. Not only were the sales increased on that article, but it proved to be a drawing card, from which other sales resulted. I am a great believer in window displays as a means of advertising, and as a means of drawing to your store there is nothing to equal it, especially when you make constant changes. Some grocers think that it is a great expense, but they overlook the valuable returns in increased sales."

This testimony to the value of window display, which could be without doubt substantiated by hundreds of other grocers, is worthy the consideration of the "doubting Thomases," who cannot see any good or consider the time wasted in giving attention to their windows. Of course, all have not the facilities that this grocer has, but if a grocer has only one window instead of six if he will take the pains and get out of that window all there is in it by having a good window display, he will reap the benefit in as large a proportion as the man with the six windows.

It is not the number of windows nor the position of the store, it is rather to the time you are willing to spend on your window display, that you have to look for the result.

Value of a Grocer's Window

The windows of a house are to allow those inside to look out. The windows of a store are to allow those outside to look in. Who wants to look out of windows or into them when there is nothing to be seen, asks Frank Farrington in the Interstate Grocer.

Outward appearances go far toward giving an impression of a person. In spite of the fact that clothes do not make the man, we judge the man often by his clothes. A store may be ever so neat and clean inside and filled with good things, yet it will be passed by as a dirty, unpleasant place if the windows are dingy. The chances of a store with dingy windows being clean inside are about as great as those of a neat man being dressed in slovenly apparel.

Don't be discouraged about your windows and neglect them just because they are not plate glass. Of course, plate glass is the best, and if you can have it get it by all means, but you can live without it. Make the very best of the material at your command. Any windows that are big enough to let in light are big enough to let in trade. Keep them talking with plain window signs and good goods, and they will bring the business.

To be successful as advertisers your windows must be changed often. If you do business in a small town, once a week will do very well.

The windows of a store should as far as possible be an index to the contents of the store—not all at once, but week by week. They ought to show one line at a time, but they ought to cover the whole stock by degrees.

It ought to be that a passer could tell by your windows what sort of a store yours is, whether dry goods or groceries or drugs. Then if he miss seeing your sign he will not remain ignorant.

Your window ought to be a bureau of information regarding your whole store. It is quite strange how often people will look the windows of a store over to see what kind of a store it is without a glance at the sign which would tell them at once.

A man came into my store one day and said :

"I was just into Smith's drug store a-lookin' for school books. He didn't have none that I wanted an' tol' me that there wasn't any other store near here that kep' 'em ; but as I come out I seen your sponges out in front here, an' I sez to myself, where there's sponges there's school books, an' here I be."

That man drew an illogical conclusion, but it proved to be right. Keep something in sight to show what kind of a store you are running. There are plenty of folks who will not see your sign, be it ever so plain. That doesn't mean that you don't need a sign. You have seen people lift goods from under a 10c. price card and ask, "How much are these ?"

It is worth while for a country merchant to visit one of the large cities twice a year if only to get window ideas and to have the conviction forced upon him that it is showing the goods with the prices attached that sells them.

A new family comes to your town or neighborhood. They have money. They will use perhaps several hundred dollars' worth of your kind of goods a year. They are looking for a place to buy such things. They came from a town or other neighborhood where there was a style to the stores. Are they going to pick out your store from among the available ones of your kind ? Are they ? Well, compare the external appearance of your windows and their dressings to those of the other fellows. Now, people will get into the store that looks from the outside like the best one of its sort. The chances favor it. At least if one store looks better outside than the others, they are going to try it sooner or later and that store will probably keep the family trade if the inside service is good.

Take pains. Windows require pains (no joke intended) more than almost anything else about your store. That doesn't excuse shiftlessness in the back of the store either. Nothing excuses shiftlessness anywhere, but at all events don't have it apparent in your windows.

China and Glassware—Aaron Graeb, Hespeler, Ont.

Make the most of your windows, and you will find that there is more to do in the store.

CHINA AND GLASSWARE WINDOW

Attractively dressed china and glassware windows are rare and it is with pleasure we reproduce this picture of another window of Aaron Graeb, Hespeler, Ont., and trimmed also by A. Hagmuir. The blot of light is one of the blemishes of photography. The window, or rather the stand in it, is a double-decker. This device doubles the advantageous display space in the window. Upper and lower stands are crescent shaped. Otherwise the picture speaks for itself.

PRICE TICKETS.

In the matter of window dressing there seems to be a difference of opinion as to the use of price tickets, one well known authority stating that the goods can or should be arranged in so attractive a manner that they would prove a drawing card of themselves and need no prices. Others favor the use of price tickets because the price in a great many instances governs sales. According to conditions or location, both systems may be used to advantage. In the better class stores where 90 per cent. of the sales are on credit, price tickets would not cut any figure, but in the district where cash sales are a feature, then, no doubt, price tickets would help sales. This controversy, however, brings one important point to the front, that is as to the value of window dressing, the benefits of which have been conceded, and now the question at issue is what method to use.

Originality and constant change are the two principal features of window dressing.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS AND THEIR WORK

The commercial traveler works harder, kicks as much and laughs more than any other man in business. He's usually working against time—train time; delays are innumerable, but his cheerfulness is still with him when he greets the boss in the warehouse Saturday morning and all gather about the sample room table for a little gospel talk on the week ahead. A train is delayed by a cow on the track or a broken coupling, and fifty travelers miss their connection at the junction point a little way ahead and kick their heels for half a day. What wonder if draw poker is resorted to? The railways don't go everywhere; there is still a lot of driving to be done. Occasionally the horses get the better of the driver, spill everybody preparatory to smashing the rig, and the traveler lies up for a week with a sprained ankle. A friendly customer takes a notion to give the traveler an automobile ride instead of letting him hire a livery. Very kind of him, indeed, and very pleasant till the auto thinks it's a flying machine and tries to hop a 14-foot ditch and lands at the bottom of it. All are minor incidents to vary the routine of the grocery traveler's hard gallop for a living.

Then there's the other side, the variety which is the spice of life, from tough steak to tough gravy and farm hand bed to damp sheets. Of course the customers are always considerate and never keep the traveler waiting. They only stop to clean up a box of raisins and give them a little drink while a clerk picks his teeth. That's nothing with three other customers to see and the train due in half an hour. Yes, there's a fine line of variety in the traveler's life. What wonder that his good humor is always apparent? Why, if it hadn't grown on him from childhood he wouldn't be fit company in a church-going community one Sunday in seven come eleven. Nothing short of a surgical operation or a bad railway wreck will separate the grocery traveler from his smile and careful observation has demonstrated that he's always the jolliest man in church.

HUSTLING AT SEVENTY-TWO.

There is a commercial traveler in Canada who is a standing rebuke to the "too old at forty" nonsense of which so much has been heard of late. He is seventy-two years of age, and has been on the road for about fifty-five years.

He is still considered one of the best travelers on the road, and that his principals still have confidence in him is evidenced by the fact that at the beginning of the new year an increase of $300 was made to his salary.

As he is still vigorous and is likely to maintain his vigor for some time, we may look for another advance in his salary at the beginning of next year.

This gentleman, it might be said, represents a large manufacturing firm with factories both in Canada and the United States.

Swearing a Spur to Action

I had an old friend who had been out on my proposition for several weeks and had been steadily falling behind, writes W. N. Mitchell in Salesmanship. He came to see me about the probable cause of his failure, and was inclined to think that the fault was all with the proposition.

"That isn't possible," said I, "when over 1,000 other salesmen are meeting with success, and when you consider that out of the 500 men we hired last year, only three failed to make good. The fault is with you, old man. You haven't been working. You think you have, but you haven't, really."

He was huffy in a minute, told me the number of prospects he had seen, the sleepless nights he had spent and the pairs of shoes he had scuffed out in my service, and accused me of ingratitude in implying that he hadn't worked hard.

"I told you that I believed you thought you had been working hard," I said, "but there is a great difference between really working and merely thinking you are working. Now, I will make a bargain with you. We will overlook the fact that you have lost the firm some money. I will renew your contract for six months at double the salary I have been paying you, if you will agree to one thing"—I paused impressively.

"I will agree to nearly anything," he said, "if it is going to help me get business."

"Well, then, I want you to promise to go to a notary public each night, no matter where you may be, and get him to witness your statement that you have worked to the utmost of your capacity for eight consecutive hours that day. I will furnish printed blanks for this purpose, and provide you in advance with money to pay the notaries. When the blank is signed you are to mail it to me the last thing before you retire every evening. I am so sure that you can succeed if you try this that I am willing to enter into a six months' contract with you at double the salary, if you agree to it."

The salesman exploded. He was the maddest man I ever saw. When he had done abusing me, he rushed out of the office, banged the door behind him and disappeared; and yet I couldn't see that my proposition was an insult to him.

An hour later he came back.

"I have been thinking it all over," he said, "and I see that your plan is well meant. It isn't intended for an insult, but just for a stimulant. I shall be heartily glad to accept your offer," and we signed the paper.

Next day the salesman started out. When he had been gone twenty-four hours I received the envelope from him, containing three orders, with a printed blank signed by him and witnessed by a notary public, reading:

"I have worked to the utmost of my capacity, without thought of failure or discouragement, and with the one thing in view—results—for eight consecutive hours to-day."

"This is pretty promising," I said to myself. Next day came another slip accompanied by five orders. They began coming faster after that. Before the end of the month the man had reached next to the highest place in our force, judged by the volume of business. He wrote me a jovial letter, saying that my system had been his salvation. He said that he was spurred all through the day by the thought that he would have to give his solemn word before a notary public at the close of the day, as to the amount of actual effort he had expended on the work. With this prospect before him he had stopped fuming and fretting and wasting time in wishing, and had got right down to the rock bottom of affairs and applied himself to business. The results were more than satisfactory. I discontinued this system at the end of the first month, since it was no longer necessary, and his results have been exceptionally good since that time.

I have used this scheme in two or three other cases where I knew that the salesman needed just such a prod or spur. I have never been unwise enough to put it in general use or think of using it in the case of a salesman who would misunderstand and resent the spirit which prompted it, or who could not be relied upon to fulfill its obligations honorably.

AUTOMOBILES FOR TRAVELERS.

Since the automobile has come into pretty general use its employment by the business world has become marked. It is now generally used for trucking purposes, city salesmen use it extensively to call on their trade, and on the prairies of North and South Dakota and the plains of Montana it is proving a great boon to traveling men as a means of rapid transit between the various towns on their routes.

So well is the automobile adapted to the uses of the traveling men that some of the leading wholesale houses of St Paul are now furnishing their men with machines for the sole purpose of covering their territory. Where heretofore they have been able to make only from two to three or four towns a day and have been compelled to jump freight trains, drive by team and employ any means that they could to make these, often being able to make only a hurried call in a store, they are now able to make anywhere from eight to twelve towns a day in their automobiles, spending all the time that is necessary in each town to thoroughly talk up their lines.

On the whole, the concerns that have thus far equipped their men with machines find it cheaper in the long run, and in addition they get more efficient service from the traveling men. The experiment will be watched with a great deal of interest by other houses, and if the plan proves successful there is little doubt that a majority of the large houses of St. Paul will equip their men in certain territories with automobiles for the purpose of covering the ground faster and better.

TRAVELERS' HOME SCHEME.

A company of Oklahoma commercial travelers have pooled their financial interests in a corporation known as the Travelers' Investment Company, the object of the company being to purchase land and subdivide it into lots, to be sold on easy terms to brother travelers who wish a home or an investment. The company is composed of twenty-five men, all commercial travelers, and incorporated for $50,000. The shares are $1 each. Twenty-five hundred shares are already subscribed, and no more shares will be sold for one year. The subscribed shares are paid for in monthly installments. The idea is one that could be adopted in many of the large commercial centres, and would prove the means of giving many a hard-working traveler a start in life. Philip Daly, a member of the Oklahoma city council, U.C.T., is the leading spirit in the Oklahoma City enterprise.

WHERE TIME DON'T COUNT.

An enterprising Salesman from one of the largest cities went to a certain rural community and endeavored to sell an incubator to a farmer. His arguments did not make any impression on the agriculturalist. Finally, as a clincher in favor of his up-to-date improvement, he exclaimed :

"Look at the time it will save !"

The farmer squirted a mouthful of tobacco juice on the ground before replying, and then said, with provoking calmness :

"Oh, what's time to a setting hen !"

AN EDITOR'S TRIBUTE.

The editor on his travels is in constant association with traveling men on railroads and in hotels, writes John Wiley, editor of the Hotel Monthly. Our observations of "the man on the road" and our personal knowledge of what he is up against in the way of discomforts a greater part of the time, impels us to write a few words of tribute to the traveling man, in appreciation of his almost universal good nature under conditions that would sour the average human being.

The traveling man away from home is subject to so many petty annoyances that, were it not for a well spring of good nature, would make him a chronic grumbler. We see him waiting in dingy, dirty, uncomfortable depots for trains that are hours late ; and he makes the best of it with a few pleasantries, and sees the bright side of life, when the train finally does come in. He reaches hotels after the meals are over, and he has to go hungry until the next meal or the next day, as the case may be, unless he can get a bite in some country eating place where indigestibles are the stock in trade. He is apt to find a good hotel with a nice bed, clean linen and every accommodation for his comfort ; and he is also apt to find himself in a hotel where the accommodations are miserable, and the prices charged are extortionate. And he may kick, and sometimes he does kick, but more often he makes a quiet mental note to give the house of poor accommodation as little of his patronage as he possibly can, and to arrange his route to give as much of his time as he can to the house that studies his comfort.

I have heard traveling men kick. And I have observed some of them (very few), kick where they had no excuse to. But these are the exceptions to the rule.

The average traveler who goes out to sell goods finds it necessary to "wear that smile," for the grumpy man cannot sell goods. It is the pleasant fellow, who sees the bright side of life, that makes a success of this business. And the pleasant fellow on the road is not a Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. He carries his smile into the hotel, and into the store of his customers. He has a cheery word for the hotel clerk, also for the waitress, and the bell boy, and his fellow travelers, and for every one about him. He appreciates the clerk who gives him a cheery welcome ; and the clerk who is popular with the traveling man is the one for whom hotelkeepers are looking to pay the salary to.

The traveling man may, occasionally, be up against it hard, and show vexation in his manner ; but it is often excusable. There are more traveling men who belong to the "Don't Worry Club" than can be found in any other calling, we believe. They have their troubles ; we all have ; but, like the old doxology words—

Behind a frowning Providence
He hides a smiling face.

NEW SOUTH WALES' GROWTH.

The remarkable progress made by New South Wales since 1856—the year of the grant of self-government—is shown by the statistics which have been specially prepared for the jubilee. Fifty years ago the population was 252,640 ; it is now 1,504,700. The revenue of the state has risen from £1,986,553 to £11,740,-348 ; the imports have increased from £5,460,971 to £29,350,034, and the exports from £3,430,880 to £36,756,366 ; while the value of the wool output has grown from £1,303,070 to £13,446,260. Another very satisfactory circumstance pointed out by Mr. Carruthers (the Premier and treasurer) is that the whole of the interest on the public debt does not go abroad, at least £30,000,000 of the £80,000,000 constituting the total debt being held in the state or in connection with the state.

CUBA'S PRODUCTIONS.

Cuba in 1902 produced 5,997,238 bags of sugar and in 1905, 8,163,998 bags. In the meantime the yield of tobacco increased from 452,407 English hundredweight to 1,812,540 hundredweight. The number of live stock, consisting of cattle, horses, mules and asses, increased from 1,190,583 in 1902 to 2,566,835 in 1905. This progress in Cuba's productiveness is said to be largely due to the reciprocity with the United States.

FLOUR MILLING INDUSTRY OF CANADA

Roughly speaking each man, woman, and child in Canada is said to eat a barrel of flour in a year. This is equal to about half a two pound loaf per day. But while this perhaps, obtained when the country was younger, it is doubtful if the same quantity now eaten in the form of bread, when so much breakfast and cereal food is on the market. People demand a mixed diet to the extent that has become customary. The milling industry is growing however, from year to year and at present the annual flour output of Canada may be reckoned at between eight and nine million barrels, about one quarter of which is exported, and the remainder used at home. One would imagine that the export trade would be much larger than it is, but Canadian millers find such a growing market at home that they do not make much of a bid for export trade, and give only of their surplus stock for across seas shipment. In addition to this, it is much cheaper to ship wheat than flour, and as labor in other lands is also cheaper than it is in Canada, they can manufacture flour at a better price than we can lay it down to them.

Canadian Milling.

The greater part of Canadian milling is done in what is termed the East, or that part of Canada east of Lake Superior. There is scarcely a hamlet in Ontario, that hasn't its small mill which aims at supplying local trade; but although there are a large number of these small mills scattered throughout the province, their combined output does not nearly equal the output of the comparitively few large mills.

There is no doubt however, that before very many years the preponderance of the milling industry will be in the west. Conditions are now shaping that way. New mills, great and small, are going up in Manitoba and the West and large milling companies seem desirous of getting close to the base of supplies, and yearly the local western consumption is becoming greater.

Reaching the Trade.

Ordinarily there is no middleman or jobber in the flour business in supplying the domestic trade. The miller deals directly with the grocer and the baker, the only man who can be called a wholesaler being the man who centralizes the surplus output of smaller mills, principally for export. Some of the large milling companies will sell only in car lots, however, and this in a measure makes any buyer a wholesaler as he often supplies small dealers who have not a large enough demand to warrant them buying in quantities.

Best Wheat is Bleached.

With the large volume of wheat that comes from the West year after year one wonders what becomes of the wheat raised in the eastern provinces. Everywhere the slogan of millers is "made from Manitoba wheat," until one thinks Ontario Winter wheat is an unknown quantity. But it has its place—and a prominent place it is—in the manufacture of flour. Being of a moist character, and not so strong as winter wheat flour made from western wheat is almost altogether used by biscuit manufacturers and confectioners. In making of biscuits and pastry, the object is to get a flour that will not rise too high, yet will have the maximum qualities of shortness and lightness desired for this class of food. And even in bread making, eastern wheat is found to be a very valuable element when blended with that of the West. in producing a flour which meets with the general requirements of family baking. A flour thus blended has the rising and baking qualities, yet being tempered with the milder product, answers for all purposes.

What is Good Wheat.

In every grain of wheat, no matter in what country grown, there are flour elements, the proportion of each in relation to the others determining the value of the grain. These are strength, flavor, color, and yield of flour, and in this connection it might be somewhat startling to those who are wont to herald Manitoba wheat as incomparably better than Ontario wheat, to listen to some of the evidence brought out before the Grain Commission which recently heard the plaint of western grain raisers and dealers that the standard of wheat was too high. One witness who has had years of experience as a miller and baker stated that in only one of the four named elements did Manitoba wheat excel Ontario's wheat, and that was in strength. In yield of flour it was not more than the equal of Ontario wheat; while in flavor it was greatly behind, and in color was also lacking. In the city of Toronto it was found that when Manitoba flour was first used the rising quality of the dough showed at once a marked advance, but coincident with this came a noticeable lack in the one time sweetness in flavor of the bread. To counteract the loss of this in the introduction of Manitoba flour, other methods of restoring the flavor had to be resorted to, until to-day, the use of malt extract, and sugar is quite common in bakeries.

Qualities of Flour.

Five grades of flour are made from each grain of wheat. This might seem a little strange, and one is led to enquire if a grain of wheat is not of the same quality throughout. But it is not the consistency of the grain that determines the grade of flour; so much as rolling and sifting that brings out the degrees of fineness, and excludes the coarser particles. After the wheat is cleaned, it goes through a series of rolling. The first rolling does little more than break open the berry and loosening the softer part of the flour-making portion of the wheat so that it falls away. The crushed grain is then carried over a silk bolting cloth or sieve when the flour that is in it is taken off and the balance of the meal carried back to a new set of rollers, and another sifting. The next sifting gives a higher grade flour, on account of being subjected to a heavier pressure which crushes the harder part of the berry left unbroken by the first rolls. This necessarily brings out a finer flour which is bolted through a finer mesh, and hence becomes a higher grade.

Separate Set of Rolls.

Locality determines to a great extent how flour is put up. Throughout Ontario and Quebec the paper bags containing seven, fourteen, twenty-four or forty-eight pounds are the most popular method of distribution. This makes it easy for the retailer to handle and sell and at the same time brings prominently before the consumer the brand, and name of the manufacturer. Maritime merchants prefer their flour because there people bake their own bread, so buying in large quantities in barrels and in this way the greater part of wheat goes to the eastern provinces is put up in wood. They claim ease of handling and transportation to be the reason they like it in barrels other than in sacks and then the ability to turn the barrels into cash by selling to apple packers, and sometimes to fish packers, is said to be an additional reason.

Where We Will Ship.

The export trade of flour to England does not at present give promise of growing to any great proportions. It is to other lands that Canadian millers will have to look for a market—to lands where the art of milling has not reached the advanced stage that milling in this country has attained. Egypt has begun to make inquiries for our flour, and other parts of Africa show an inclination to deal with us. Great Britain is now in a position to do its own milling. During the last ten years no British industry has been so profitable as the milling industry, and for this reason a large amount of capital sought investment in it. Like every other industry that shows good results the flour trade was overdone, and mills have increased with such rapidity that the demand is already more than met. British millers are well established in the belief that Manitoba wheat is not equalled by the product of any other country in the world.

Flour Trade in Quebec

Most of the flour used in the Province of Quebec is brought from other parts of the Dominion, there not being many mills of consequence aside from the Ogilvie mills, Montreal. Outside of these, there are not in the whole province more than half a dozen mills which are worth taking account of. Ontario and Manitoba supply the greater part of the demand.

Some claim that there is a growing demand for the Manitoba flour, in preference to the Ontario product. They say that for the past few years this has been particularly noticeable. Certainly there is more spring wheat flour used now than formerly and it is for its strength that it is in request. A dealer said to the Grocer, "Flour the people a few years ago would not have looked at, being so strong, they are clamoring for now, giving it preference over all others." City trade and country trade in flour differ materially. Grocers in the city supply the milling companies with very small orders. They must, of course, keep in stock more or less flour, but large stocks are not kept as a rule.

Home-made bread has become practically a thing of the past in Montreal, Quebec, Three Rivers, and all the cities of the Province. People find that there is too much trouble in baking bread for their own use, especially so when they can have the article delivered at their door at probably less cost than they can make it. In the country, however, home-made bread still survives. In the Eastern Townships there is used probably more home-made bread than in all the rest of the Province put together, and as a consequence the flour trade through grocers in that part of the Province is quite large.

Bakers the Big Factor.

Business with the bakers in the cities however, is probably the largest single factor in the Quebec flour trade. With the population of the cities increasing every year new bakery shops are opening up, and old ones are erecting additions to their present premises.

Grocers in the smaller towns in the country districts, as a rule, buy in car load quantities, but the car is not in all cases made up of flour alone. Feed, or other lines often help to make the order. Where home-made bread is in favor the merchants mostly buy in barrels and bags of one hundred and fifty pounds. They stock in the smaller sizes also.

In the matter of the city trade, however, it cannot be said that the bakers are the only purchasers of flour. Every housewife does more or less pastry-baking, and grocers stock flour suitable for this purpose usually blended flours. But they do not buy heavily, ordering rather for immediate use. The smaller sized bags are the selling lines in the average grocery store. Seven, fourteen, twenty-four and forty-nine pound bags are stocked by most grocers in quantities sufficient to take care of their trade. It will be noticed that these weights are based mostly on barrel weight, a barrel weighing 196 lb. Thus here are twenty-eight seven pound bags in a barrel, fourteen of the fourteen pound size, while the forty-nine pound bag is just a quarter of a barrel. The one hundred pound bags are sold as well.

Millers Sell to Grocers.

Grocers deal with the millers almost exclusively. The wholesale trade does not attempt to handle the flour business, leaving it to the millers. All the milling companies have travelers covering not only the cities, but the whole province.

There are in the province biscuit manufacturing establishments which use up large quantities of flour every year, and their orders are eagerly sought by the millers.

There are no bread factories in Montreal or other cities.

Considerable of the export flour trade of the Dominion is done through the port of Montreal, large shipments being made every week.

COAL TAR LEMON PIE.

(A pure food commission in Chicago recently dissected a lemon pie bought out of stock, and found it to contain neither lemon, butter, nor sugar. The principal ingredients were various forms of coal tar and glucose.—News item.)

They're making cotton clothes from wool
And iron things from wood ;
They're making goodies out of scraps
And nasty things from good ;
They're making paper things from rags
And money out of "sky" ;
But this is sure the worst as yet—
A coal-tar lemon pie !

They're making combs from kerosene,
And pearls from olive oil ;
They're making Belgian hares of cats
And syrup out of soil ;
They're making buckwheat cakes from paste
And pumice-stone—O my !
But this is sure the time to kick—
A coal-tar lemon pie !

They're making clothing out of glass
And butter out of grease ;
While maple sugar made from sand
Is commoner than geese ;
They make from scraps and chicken bones
Most terrapin you buy ;
But anything we'll stand except
A coal-tar lemon pie !

NET PROFIT PROBLEM.

Mr. Retailer, what percentage of net profit did you make last year on your gross sales—on your business ? How does your profit for the first six months of 1906 compare with the first six months of 1905 ? Are you going, coming, or standing still ?

If you do not know how you stand you would better get down to your desk and do some figuring right quickly

If you are losing business, try to find out the cause and then endeavor to supply the remedy.

A customer is valuable. If you lose one, find out what caused him to quit The trouble may disclose a condition in your store that should not exist.

If you are not making a profit on the goods you sell, it is time you were changing your methods.

What's the use of being in business simply to get a small interest on your capital ? Wouldn't you be better off to put your money in the bank and draw interest while you direct your energies to a mart where the laborer is "worthy of his hire" ?

In all your calculations you must allow a fair salary for your labors.—Ex.

HOW TO SUCCEED AS A GROCER'S CLERK

Cheer Up And Get Busy

The clerk, like most people who wor'', gets into his vocation by chance, at any rate by no choice of his own. A chance advertisement or a card "Boy wanted" in a store window and the youngster whose only object is to get to work becomes "the boy" in a store. It might just as well have been any other kind of a shop or office. The point is he has had just the same chance as most other people. The boy whose mother makes a preacher of him when he should have been a bookkeeper or a real estate agent is just as unhappy as the clerk who should have been a preacher or a policeman. The man who is making the best of his job is not unhappy, and it's the ambitious chap, the one who wants to get the best out of himself and out of his work always that is making the best of it. Ambition means work and enthusiasm; it means keeping everlastingly at it, and it means study, learning all one can about the business, thinking about it, devising improvements.

The sorehead will never get on. If the business is distasteful get out of it. If there's no way out get to work to improve the situation. Just getting to work will let in a lot of light. Cheer up. There isn't any better motto. The man who doesn't cheer up is cheating himself out of much of the enjoyment of living and cheating other people, too — everybody, in fact, who comes in contact with him. Having cheered up, get interested in the business, study it.

A large manufacturer in a big city recently said to the writer:

"When I came back from my wedding trip I borrowed $25 to start business on. The girl's folks didn't want her to marry me; they said I was no good. I had learned my trade, but then I started in to study it, got books and papers and found out a lot of things about leather (he was a saddler) that very few saddlers ever learn. I've asked hundreds of saddlers which was the strongest side of leather and very few knew and still fewer why."

Now that man is a capitalist.

There isn't a good quality in human nature that won't serve a grocery clerk. If anyone thinks there is let him write a line to the editor and get up a discussion about it. Cheerfulness and work, however, are about the best team he can hitch up to.

PERSONAL APPEARANCE.

In few places does dress and personal appearance count for more than in a grocery store. Why shouldn't it? The grocer and his clerks are handling food stuffs all day. The grocery clerk should not have to be told to be clean and neat in his habits and person. It is one of the things he should study. In a dry goods store people have been educated to expect to see some one moving about in very fashionable clothes, but in a good many groceries wearing apparel has been neglected and there are too many clerks going about with dirty aprons, some without aprons and their trousers show it. It will pay a clerk to be clean and neat. A clean white coat and clean white apron give customers the impression their food stuffs are being cleanly handled.

The Clerk Who Knows

I've seen so many million grocery clerks in my time and have had a good deal better chance than most men have to size 'em up.

A lot of 'em are all right. Still, I don't suppose more than half are. The other half are in the business for the money they can make. They have no adaptability for it and no liking for it. They're grocery clerks and not dry goods clerks simply because the grocery job came along first.

These fellows will never be grocers in a thousand years.

The other day I spent half an hour or so in a grocery store up at Passaic, N.J. There were four clerks and the store seemed to be doing a good business.

One of the clerks was a sporty-looking youth of maybe twenty-five. He wore a pair of cheap socks so loud that you had to shout to hear yourself think.

When I was in there this clerk was waiting on a lady. As she stood at the counter there was a Ceylon tea sign just over her head. The lady was buying tea.

"I've often thought I'd try that Ceylon tea," I heard the lady say. "What's the difference between it and the regular black tea I always get?"

"There ain't no difference that I know of, ma'am," answered the socks—I mean the clerk—"except that one comes from one place and the other from another."

So the lady naturally didn't buy the Ceylon tea.

As I understand it, there's darned near as much difference between Ceylon and Japan tea as there is between tea and coffee. Surely a clerk ought to know a thing like that.

Another time, not long ago, I heard a clerk guarantee some currants he was selling to be "genuine imported currants." With an imagination that I'd have given a leg for, he told the customer all about how poor California currants were as compared with "our imported currants," and so on.

This fellow was a mixture of good and bad. He was a good clerk, for trying so hard to give his goods a fine send-off, but he was a darned poor clerk for not knowing that there are no California currants. None raised anywhere, in fact, except in Greece.

Here's one you won't believe — true, though, absolutely.

In my hearing a woman was looking at a jar of cheap preserves.

"What's this word 'compound' mean?" she asked the clerk. "I've seen it on other things, too."

"Oh, that means same as 'trade mark,'" he replied.

Wouldn't that jar you? "Same as trade mark!" Great henhouse!

I don't expect a clerk to know everything, neither do I expect a grocer to know everything there is to know about his goods, though both clerks and grocers come pretty close to doing that in England.

I've met maybe a dozen English grocery clerks, and whether we like the comparison or not, they certainly do know more than the clerks on this side.

Why? You can search me. Maybe it's because they go into the grocery business a good deal more seriously than we do here.

Over there the grocery business is a career.

Here it's a livelihood.

See here. I think I know quite a bit about the grocery business myself, though perhaps not enough to make my head hard to hold up. All I know I've absorbed by knocking up against the business, not because I've ever been in it, except for a few months as a boy.

I can answer all the questions that I'm going to write below, and there's a great lot of grocery clerks who can, too.

And, incidentally, there's an awful lot that can't.

Just read these questions over :

First. What is glucose, what does it come from, and what is it used for ?

Second. What is the difference in characteristics between Mocha coffee, Maricaibo coffee, Rio coffee and Santos coffee, and where does each come from ?

Third. What is caviare, and where is it produced ?

Fourth. What is the difference between the California olive and the Spanish queen olive, as sold in retail grocery stores ?

Fifth. Name the different characteristics of Irish, Norway and shore mackerel.

Sixth. Why are certain soaps called "oleine" soaps ?

Seventh. What is the difference between red Alaska salmon and Columbia River salmon ?

Eighth. What is the difference between Spring and Winter wheat flour ?

Ninth. What section of the country produces the best canned corn and why is it best ?

Now, there isn't anything very tough about those, is there ? All right, I'll bet a dollar not 50 per cent. of grocery clerks can answer 'em all correctly.

You see, it isn't knowing such points simply for the sake of knowing something—that isn't the idea.

There's a real selling force to them.

You take a clerk who knows the difference between Norway and shore mackerel. His boss gets in a lot of new Norways.

"Mrs. Smith," says the clerk, "we've gotten in a new lot of Norway mackerel this morning—you'll like them. Norway mackerel, you know, are entirely different from the ordinary kind. Try one ?"

She asks how they're different, and he tells her.

Ten chances to one that clerk will sell Madam Smith a Norway mackerel because he has something new and novel to offer her—something different. We're all hungry for novelty.

Suppose the clerk hadn't known the difference between Norway and other mackerel. All he could tell Mrs. Smith is that he has in some new mackerel. Don't you see how much weaker his talk is than the other fellow's ?—The Stroller in Grocery World.

GET THE HABIT OF LISTENING.

It is a good thing to get into the habit of doing precisely as you are told.

That does not seem difficult. Yet, it is a rare accomplishment.

You will hear men, women, boys and girls, of all sizes and ages, say : "Why, I thought you said," etc. This comes from the inability of most persons to accurately listen to what is said, and to make strictly accurate mental note of just what they are expected to do.

You have probably worked for the "fussy" man who is always buzzing, under the impression that he is busy ; the man who works his own nerves to a frazzle and wears on those around him. He is the man who will tell you a thing over and over again and does not seem to expect you to remember it or act upon it until it has been drummed in very well.

You probably have also worked for the very quiet man who works effectively himself and tells you what he wants done in such a subdued way that, at first, you hardly take what he says seriously. But you later find that this kind of man means just what he says and expects it to be done with the telling when he has spoken once.

This last man, while seeming to be overburdened with the details of what he did, never seems to forget anything, but can usually tell many days afterward just what he said and the circumstances surrounding the saying.

The fussy man was the man who said "I thought !"

The quiet man was the one who had the faculty and cultivated the habit of exactly taking instructions and doing just what he was told to do.

An English Grocery Clerk

An English grocery clerk working in the United States discussing the question of whether the English or American grocery clerks are the better trained says :

"The apprentice system obtains almost generally in the grocery stores of England. If a boy thinks he would like to learn the grocery business he is indentured by an ironclad legal contract to a grocer. The indenture covers a term of four years. During that time the apprentice gets no salary, but is paid what is termed pocket money. In my own case I received 75 cents per week the first year, $1.25 the second year, $1.75 the third year, and $2.25 the fourth year. In consideration of the small salary the clerk is supposed to be carefully taught the business from beginning to end, and indeed he is. In every detail the clerk is instructed, more like a pupil than a clerk, and at the end of his four years he should be a competent and thoroughly-posted grocer. During the term of apprenticeship the boy's board and clothes are provided by the boy himself, or his parents, as the case may be.

"The wages paid the English grocery clerk are relatively smaller than in this country. The first position which I obtained after finishing my apprenticeship paid me only $5 per week, though a position of some importance. Some time later I was a part manager of the finest store in London at a salary of only $10 per week. In the English grocery business a salary as employe of more than $20 is practically unknown, and very few reach this sum.

"It cannot be doubted by any one who knows them both that the English grocery clerk is better versed in his business than the American grocery clerk, because he is more thoroughly grounded in it. The American clerk knows only what he can pick up or absorb. He is seldom or never painstakingly taught anything. In station, however, the grocery clerk of the United States is much better off than the English clerk, for the reason that he has shorter hours, better pay and much less work, due to the large number of goods sold in cartons in this country. These conditions are beginning to attract English grocery clerks to this country, and they are greatly favored by American grocers, thanks to their comprehensive knowledge of the business. I can name several of the first grocery stores in Philadelphia which employ in some executive capacity an English grocery clerk, or one from the North of Ireland, which is about the same thing, as the conditions surrounding both are the same."

Men work for the sake of work. They play the game. They do not need what they win, but the joy of winning is compensation enough.

What can't be done ?

Nothing.

All things are possible.

The job looks pretty big sometimes — looks as if it can't be done.

But let's take a hack at it, anyway.

It looks like a stone wall, but let's go up against it good and hard, and maybe something will give.

Maybe it's only near-stone, after all.

Anyway, maybe we can climb over, or dig under, or hike surreptitiously around the south-west end of it.

RETAIL GROCERY ADVERTISING

What it is — What it Ought to be

TWO COMPARISONS.

For the purpose of studying the retail grocer's ways of to-day in comparison with his ways of this day one year ago, a number of ads were selected by the writer from Sept. 1906, newspapers and ranged alonside of ads clipped from Sept., 1905, newspapers. Some of the ads showed that improvement had taken place in a year's time. Others showed no change.

A few ads were also clipped bearing the names of merchants who had only recently purchased businesses. In almost every case these ads were superior to those representing grocers who had been in business some time.

If any deduction can be made from these comparisons it is this : The newly established grocer accepts the new order of things quicker than the long-established grocer.

But it should not be possible for any one to make such a deduction for it implies undue conservatism on the part of many merchants.

Time Changes.

Business system is perpetually undergoing change. Not the least important on the list is advertising. What served a decade ago as publicity will not serve to-day. No matter how strongly a retailer is entrenched in the estimation of the people of his locality he must remodel his advertising system according to the dictates of the hour because the very same people are unconsciously being influenced by those retailers who have remodelled their systems.

The grocer situated in a big city should not have to be told what the latest phrase of retail advertising is, but for the benefit of the country grocer, who doesn't get the same opportunities for analyzing advertising problems, this phase will be dealt with here.

The New Way.

It is no longer necessary for a retail grocer to give lengthy enumerations of general provisions or names of particular brands, unless the occasion is a price-cutting sale. But it is necessary that he put himself into the ads and for just these reasons: The wholesaler merchandizes in big quantities and usually has a long list of brands to sell. When he talks up these brands in a general way he indulges in general publicity that he may get the retail trade widely and firmly attached to his brands. When he quotes a special offer he bids for direct results—for orders is the result of a day's or week's advertising.

On the other hand, a retail grocer has no inducement to advertise any one make of goods unless the ads are paid for by the maker or the retailer is large enough to secure an agency for his territory. So it will be seen that while the function of the wholesaler is to impress upon the retailer the merits of his goods, the function of the retailer is to impress upon the people the merits of his store—himself, his clerks, his groceries, his prices, his delivery—not just one of these factors, but all of them.

CLANCY M. BUELL
The Handy Grocery.

Some Errors.

Failure to distinguish between two classes of advertising necessarily dissimilar has led many a retailer to unintentially boost the trade of his competitor—an ad is occasionally seen where so-and-so's coffee or pickles are advertised by one merchant while the chances are all the grocers in that town carry the goods.

Another error is paying for space to give descriptions of fruit, etc. These descriptions are all right at the opening or closing of the season when the consumer's eye has to be drawn to the merchandise to minimize spoils, losses, etc., but in the general run of the season descriptions are unnecessary.

A Grocer's Influence.

People buy groceries, fruits, etc., more because they like the grocer and his methods than because they read everything he says in the newspapers, and unless a grocer runs one of those cash Saturday night cut-price businesses, regular custom is the only thing he ever had a right to advertise for and there you come right down to "himself" advertising.

But you grocers may say; "What do you exactly mean by this 'himself' advertising? Some of the ads you reproduce on this page and praise are not that kind." True enough! Buell's and other ads shown herewith are commended not because they measure up to the writer's idea of what a retail grocer's regular ad ought to be in this day, but because they excel in their own class—in other words, are superior to other ads of similar style.

Criticism With Reproduction.

It is always encouraging to see grocers becoming critical about their newspaper ads—selecting a certain border, selecting certain type and insisting on seeing a proof. When more grocers become critical in these matters more country printers will do better work.

Clancy M. Buell, Brockville.

When making a representative selection of grocery ads for review on this page, the neat little announcement of Clancy M. Buell, Brockville, immediately appealed as a piece of retail publicity worthy of reproduction. In the single-theme style the tea ad and coffee ad generally get the lion's share of attention. How many grocers think of advertising Olive Oil or Olives? Mr. Buell doesn't neglect the large issues (watch his other ads) but he doesn't forget the small ones, and notice what a well-balanced, well-displayed ad Buell's is!

Wm. Richardson, Quyon.

Richardson of Quyon, Quebec, has a style as far from Buell's as the poles are apart. But it is a style that has its one value. That value is its naiveness.

Mr. Richardson evidently had no hand in directing the display of his ad or he would have insisted on getting a newer font of type than that to be seen in his chief display line. But notwithstanding that this ad has the antiquated appearance of the old typographical school it is rescued from mediocrity by a striking border. The white space and the small type and the black border harmonize—look not unlike a framed picture.

WM. RICHARDSON, = Quyon.

It would be impossible to reproduce all the good (or bad) ads to be seen in Canadian dailies and weeklies.

It would also be impossible to comment on them all.

In the criticisms that follow, the writer has attempted to show what different grocers in different parts of the Dominion are doing—comparisons of style, typographical arrangement, timeliness, etc.

It is thought that the criticisms will be of particular benefit to the grocers mentioned.

Kenney Bros., Parry Harbor.

The ad of Kenney Bros., is a combination of the old and new methods of advertising. The old method was to place the merchant's name at the top of the announcement. Most salesmen now recognize that they must talk about the people first, themselves second.

Kenney Bros.' ad shows its modernness by its symmetry, the personal element and studied display. Practically speaking, the last item on their list should have been first. It is the most important.

Ruppel & Co., Elmira.

The White Grocery adhere to the matter-of-fact style—are even less pretentious than Wm. Richardson. They do not seek to clothe their words with typographical strength, which fact is rather to be lamented. Art is a powerful eye element in advertising. Improve the layout of your ads, Ruppel & Co. Use smaller type, use a border and get more balance in your ads.

Goode & McKay, Walkerton.

Walkerton has a "goode" advertiser in Goode & McKay. The wording of the ad under review is breezy and pointed, and smacks of self-confidence. In addition, it is timely and free from repetition.

P. M. McKay's Sons, Milton.

In the "Canadian Champion," Milton, Ont., P. M. McKay's Son's ad was noticed—for its oddity more than its beauty. No heading is to be seen, no opening sentences. The ad just starts off with and then follows other enumerations. P. M. McKay's Sons do, however, come into the ad, even if only for a line. They say, at the close: "Give us your trade—we will do the rest." You of Milton, more of the personal element in your ads.

Cain Bros., Yarmouth.

"Brevity is the soul of business" might be advanced as the philosophy of Cain Bros. The Cains believe to give the word is all that's necessary. Accentuation is needless. Consequently, in a 65-line double-column space only thirty-five words are to be seen. But Cain Bros.' style has a praiseworthy side to it—their ads will never be lost in a plethora of announcements. The exclamation marks and the white space and the preponderance of rules have a certain magnetism over readers.

Hunter, of Cornwall.

The "Cornwall Freeholder" has among other grocery ads that of "Hunter's Tea and Crockery Emporium." The ad under criticism specializes on tea, coffee and spices. The short paragraph is employed throughout and the tone of the matter is creditable.

Hunter's ads would be improved by the addition of forceful headings.

K. George & Co., North Bay.

K. George & Co., employ publicity methods much similar to Cain Bros. But the compositor hasn't given their ad sufficient balance. As a result it has a top-sided appearance.

Hughes & Ford, Boissevain, Man.

"Exceedingly plain" best describes the ad of Hughes & Ford clipped from a Boissevain paper. Details are given without any adjectives and very little "exhortation to buy" appears.

talk. They open up with what might be dubbed an non-committal heading, then comes the advertised article, then this climax: "Price? Why, not higher than the price of common salmon—only 20c. per jar." Woodman & McKee, strive for better type display and enclose your ads in borders.

Nelson Aubrey, North Bay.

North Bay has a candid grocer in Nelson Aubrey. This gentleman recently purchased the grocery stock of W. Irving and in proclaiming the fact to the people of North Bay he states his case frankly—with little or no color. Mr. Aubrey evidently cherishes the belief that merit in the man, rather than merit in the ad, secures trade.

O'Donnell & Co., Forest.

Think that prices rule the world—at least, around bargain time. So when they have special inducements to offer in white wear and toilet ware, they merely enumerate the particulars and leave the rest to the sagacious instincts of buyers. O'Donnell & Co.'s ads could be set more effectively.

R. Brett, Tottenham, Ont.

Has the "because" reasoning down pretty fine. But he really employs the manufacturer's style and on this point, no doubt is influenced by the makers of the particular brand of flour he seeks to boom. Brett's ad is attractively designed and attractively set.

N. Rousseau, Cookshire.

The chief facts that N. Rousseau, of Cookshire, Quebec, attempts to impress upon the minds of his readers is that he is a grocer. But N. Rousseau does not employ any of the argumentative arts. Seemingly, he relies upon his name and address and—himself behind the counter.

J. C. Hanley & Co., Belleville.

J. C. Hanley & Co., run one of the silent appeal ads on vinegar, spices, etc. In a 55-line space nothing is to be seen but bare particulars. Hanley & Co.. come closer to your customers. Tell them some of those things about your store that you know to be true.

E. O'Flaherty, Stratford.

Any person glancing over the back page of the Stratford "Beacon" cannot help but notice E. O'Flaherty's ad. It is only a small one—30-lines, single column—but it is characterized by suitable display and there is no crowded appearance. O'Flaherty's style couldn't be improved upon unless he was to make a daily bulletin out of his space, i.e., one day put in, say, butter (quoting prices), the next day tea, and so on.

J. Ward, Selkirk, Ont.

Has some fairly good matter in an ad that is badly set instead of consolidating the least important statements, thus giving emphasis to the most important, the compositor indents a line here and there and everywhere, which cannot help but give the ad a hacked look.

G. W. Milton, Sackville, N.B.

George W. Milton makes his ad in the "Tribune" speak. He employs turned rules, index marks, etc., to assist his "straight from the shoulder" statements. Mr. Milton is on the right track. He might consider the advisability of alternating a catchy sidehead with the plain unadorned sidehead he now uses.

Henry Robbins, Vienna, Ont.

Disproportionate emphasis on chief lines constitutes the gravest fault of Henry Robbin's ads. Otherwise the clarity of his ennunciations and the pointedness of his comparisons are first-rate factors.

SAMPLE ADVERTISEMENTS.

Sample ads ought to be suggestive over a wide territory and consequently may not do for a cutting out or using holus-bolus by grocers anywhere. Here are two, one a little personal talk on the methods and aims when perhaps no particular line is demanding publicity,

Dried Fruits

You'll have to pay for them this year. Valencia raisins are a quarter crop ; the privileged company in Greece has put up the price of currants ; sultana raisins are a failure ; there is a good crop in California, but the demand will be very heavy, and the Growers' Association want all they can get. The same is true of prunes.

We have the best goods on the market, and we have lower grades as well.

Valencia Raisins	12c to 15c
Sultanas	12c " 20c
California Seeded	12½c " 14c
Currants	10c " 13c
Prunes	7c " 15c

The increased cost will not mean much to any single housekeeper; stop and think before taking inferior goods at low prices. Come and compare the various grades. We always advise the best.

The Seasonable Ad.

the other is a suggestion in regard to dried fruits. This telling the people things they dont know will interest them. Stimulate interest in your ads and increase your reputaion as a grocer who knows. It is the grocer who knows his business in whom the people will have confidence. Demonstrations of knowledge on the part of the grocer ought to be effective. There's one thing about these knowledge talks, there is no end to them. When the entire stock has been gone over the advertiser can begin again and tell something else about each article.

THE MAKING OF A GOOD SHOE

An Article for the General Stork Clerk

In buying a pair of shoes, or a stock of shoes for a store, the question of how to determine their wearing qualities is one difficult to settle by the lay mind. Yet there are points and features in the quality of the leather, and the workmanship, the close observation of which will give one a fairly good idea of what a shoe should be. The quality of the leather depends largely upon the age of the animal, and the process of tanning and preserving. The younger animal naturally has the softer skin and the smaller pore, which by simple tests can be readily distinguished from the hide of an old animal which is harder to the touch and has an open pore that more readily retains dampness, and as a result stiffens and cracks. In making a test to ascertain these points, a simple and effective way is to put some small object inside the shoe, such as the handle of a pocket knife, or a lead pencil, and press it firmly against the surface to be examined. This will stretch the leather and enable one to easily discern whether the grain and pores are coarse or fine. In fact any method by which one can give the leather a slight pull or stretch will give the desired result.

Workmanship.

The workmanship on a shoe is quite as essential to its wearing qualities as is the quality of the leather. In this connection, very little is hidden from the purchaser except the way in which the sole is fastened to the vamp, and even defects in this can sometimes be detected by a test in trying to pull the sole from the vamp, although one cannot give the same severity to-a-hand test as can be given by wearing the shoe for a few days (particularly when wearing a number seven shoe on a number nine foot.) Still the test is worth trying. The general workmanship, however, which is visible to the eye is usually a criterion of what can be expected in the unseen parts, for there would really be very little profit in putting a good class of work on the outside, and then scamping the parts that are hidden.

Essential points to be considered in this connection are, the manner in which the eyelets are put on, the regularity of the stitching, the apparent strength of each seam, and the way in which the smaller parts are sewed on. The single and double stitching should also be looked into as it will be noticed that some shoes have only one row of stitching, while others have two. The quality of the linings also, are some indication of what the shoe is, and of how it will last. Light, flimsy fabric, poorly sewn certainly detracts from the life of a shoe, and causes annoyance to the wearer by ripping, and puckering.

The Start to Shoedom.

The first operation in the making of a shoe is the cutting. The cutting is all done by hand, by laying the pattern on and following it around with a small knife. This makes a lot of work and cannot be done by machinery, for in every style of mens' shoes there are ten sizes, and to do the work for all by power would require a die for each size. The linings are cut in the same manner, but being thin, several thicknesses are cut at the same time. After cutting, the pieces are taken to the sewing department where they are sewed to their accompanying parts. The linings are treated in the same manner and are then joined to their counterparts in leather. The uppers are sewed together first, then the black strap is sewed on, and finally the whole is joined to the vamp, or part between the sole and the upper. The soft part of the shoe having then some semblance of the shape it is to be, is lasted, or put upon the wooden form, on which has already been lightly tacked the leather insole. The lasting machine is a wonderful piece of mechanicism. It has ten fingers which take hold of the leather in a way that is almost human, and hold it over the shoe form while the operator puts in the tacks with a small hand machine that drops tacks quickly as one could count them.

Ready for the Sole.

The shoe is then ready for the outer sole, which has had a groove cut around the edge, and about half an inch of its wearing surface turned back to receive the sewing. The soles are sewed on by machine, the operation taking but a few moments. The shoe is then ready for heel. The heels are built up with solid leather in layers which are cemented, and subjected to a pressure of twenty tons in order to make them compact and show no joints between layers. When the heels are all thoroughly hardened they are taken to a machine where the nails are put in. This also consists of one operation, the whole set of nails around the heel being driven in by one down pressure of the press.

This about completes the general constructive part of the shoe, but it has yet to go through many handlings before it goes out of the factory. All the rough edges of the soles and heels are pared down and smoothed off by knife heads and buffing wheels, and the soles cleaned up and smoothed by sand wheels. The light colored leather is then blackened, and burnished with hot steel burnishes operated by power.

All shoes go through an ironing process, which consists of placing them on a form just as a woman would a garment, and going over them with a double handled hot iron. This smoothes out all the wrinkles and gives them an even, finished appearance.

The Shoe Doctor.

They are then ready for the inspector. Each shoe is picked up and looked over inside and out for flaws either in the work, or the leather, for by this time the leather has had a great deal of pulling and stretching and if it is weak in any part, the defect can be now easily seen. When any faults are found, shoes are turned over to the shoe doctor who looks them over and fixes up the fault if it can be fixed. If it is an "incurable," it is separated from the rest. When a sufficient number of these shoes are gathered together they are jobbed off for what they will bring, going out into the world, unstamped and unnamed.

One of the most interesting machines in a shoe factory is the Goodyear welt stitcher. The Goodyear welt is a strip of heavy leather about three quarters of an inch wide which is first sewed on to the vamp, and then to the sole with a lock stitch. The feature of this stitch is that the sole can be cut anywhere or worn down without the stitching losing its power or coming out

TEA: WHERE IT GROWS, ITS MAKES AND KINDS

To have an intimate working knowledge of all the multitudinous kinds, styles and gradings of tea is without the bounds of the necessary knowledge of a competent grocer. That is for the expert whose vocation is tea. Without, however, being fanciful in his pursuit of knowledge a grocer might very well make himself aware of the principal kinds and qualities of the teas of the world.

Of these there are something over two hundred. This list looks less formidable when it is remembered that there is considerable similarity in the classification and grading of the teas from the six principal producing countries and that China, the most prolific of varieties, has only some half dozen general classifications.

There are estimated to be in the world some 3,000 tea brands, blends, trade names, trade marks, package names, etc., connected with the tea industry. In the list of China teas given below there are some of too low a grade for admission to America and others too expensive for export, and consequently unknown to the general trade.

The World's Supply.

Taken in the order of the volume of their contributions to the world's tea supply, that is, their exports, the producing countries and their exports are: India, 207,159,000 lbs.; Ceylon, 157,929,000 lbs.; China, 193,016,000 lbs.; Japan, 46,069,000 lbs. What country produces the most tea is not known, because nothing is known of the volume of China's domestic tea trade. If the 400 millions of Chinese are heavy tea drinkers the total production must be enormous. As it is the foreign tea trade is confined to the treaty ports.

Canada's importations last year with the country of origin were: Ceylon, 11,557,916 lbs.; India, 8,889,343 lbs.; Japan, 3,910,062 lbs.; China, 775,192 lbs.; other countries, 14,709 lbs.

China Teas.

China teas sent abroad are mostly of two kinds, China greens, the outlet for which is Shanghai, and China Congous, black, so-called "English breakfast tea." There are besides Souchongs, seldom used in America, China Oolongs, also black, scented teas and Mandarin. There are also considerable exportations of compressed tea, fannings and dust.

China greens are of two kinds, country greens and Ping Sueys. Country greens are classified as to cup qualities as follows: Moyunes, (Nankin, Pakheong and Hyson liquored), Teenkais, Fychows, Soeyoans, Wenchows, local packs.

Each of these kinds is prepared in the following kinds or makes:

Gunpowder — Extras, first, second, third.

Imperial—First, second, third.

Young Hyson (Foong Mee, Chun Mee, Go Mee, Sow Mee)—First, second, third, cargo.

Hyson—First, second, third—Twankay.

The gradings for all country greens are: Fancy, choice, finest, fine, medium, standard. Fychows are smoky teas not admitted to America.

Chinese Styles or Makes.

The styles or makes of Ping Sueys are: Pin heads, extra gunpowder, first gunpowder, second gunpowder, third gunpowder, first pea leaf, second pea leaf, first Young Hyson, second Young Hyson.

China Congous are known as South China, red leaf Congous, North China, black leaf Congous, and some other various types. The classifications of North and South China Congous are:

South China.	North China.
Kaisow	Moning
Cheong-lok	Ning-chow
Chick Sowkai	Ke-Mun
Ching-wo	Ichang
Saryune	Kin-tuk
Soumoo	Oonfa
Sin-chune	Oonam
Suey-kut	Chun Sowkai
Yung-how	Yung Low Tung
Yung-tong	Oopak
Paklin	Liling
Paklum	Kutoan
Panyong	Ho-how
	Shuntam

The other Congous are Campoi, Canton, Hoyune, Padrae, Pekoe, Pouchong, Qui-fa, Tayshan.

China Oolongs are sub-divided as follows: Amoy (Kokews, Mohea, Ningyong), Ankois, Bohea, Foochow (Saryune, string teas, with these gradings, choicest to choice, finest, fine, superior, good, fair), Suey Kut, Ching Wo, Tycon, Panyong, Padrae, Pekeo-oolong.

The Souchongs of China are sub-divided into Canton (new make or Macao), Lapsing ("Foochow-souchong"), Oolong-souchong, Padrae, Pekoe, Tonmow-quam, Panyong.

The scented teas are sub-divided thus: Capers — Gunpowder, called "black pearl."

Pekoes—Pekoe, Orange-pekoe, Flowery-pekoe, Hung-muey.

Pouchongs—Pouchong, Pouchong-pekoe, Padra-pouchong.

Canton scented ("Congee").

Macao.

System of Marketing.

In India and Ceylon there is a different system of classifying and marketing teas. In China the teas are brought to the treaty ports cured just enough to preserve them. They are put into great warehouses and there graded. In India and Ceylon the tea of every garden is completely cured and packed before leaving the estate. The result is that while the same classifications and gradings are followed quality is not uniform and an orange pekoe of one garden might be no better than a pekoe of another. In China and Japan, where the grading, curing and packing is done in bulk, the buyer can get any number of chests of exactly the same quality.

Tea of India.

Indasia teas include those of India, Ceylon and Java. Indian teas are classified by the districts of growth, ten of them as follows: Assam, Darjeeling, Travancore, Dooars, Punjab, Kangra, Sylhet, Cachar, Nilgiri, Chittagong.

The gradings are broken orange-pekoe, orange-pekoe, flowery orange-pekoe, pekoe, pekoe-souchong, souchong, fannings, dust—8.

Indian greens are classified as follows:

Colored—Gunpowder, 1st and 2nd, Imperial, 1st and 2nd, Young Hyson, 1st and 2nd, Sow Mee, Hyson 1st and 2nd.

Uncolored—Young Hyson, 1st and 2nd, Hyson, 1st and 2nd, fannings, dust.

In Sunny Ceylon.

Ceylon tea is classified and graded almost the same as the Indian product, though according to the Tea and Coffee Trade Journal the black has one more kind. The classification from the best downward is as follows: Broken orange pekoe, orange pekoe, flowery orange pekoe, pekoe one and two, broken pekoe, pekoe souchong, broken pekoe souchong, fannings, dust.

Ceylon greens are classified thus: Gunpowder 1st and 2nd, Imperial 1st and 2nd, Young Hyson 1st and 2nd, and Hyson 1st and 2nd. Dust and siftings are known as choice to fancy, fair to good.

Island of Java.

Java teas are known as follows :

Blacks—Pekoe, pekoe-souchong, congou, oolong.

Greens—Imperial, Hyson, Young Hyson.

Japan teas are spoken of as pan-fired, sun-dried, basket-fired, porcelain-fired.

The gradings for each of these kinds are : Extra choicest, choicest, choice, finest, fine, good medium, medium, good common, common. Other kinds are nibs, dust and fannings.

Formosa produces but one kind, Formosa oolong. The other name is Tamsui and the gradings are eleven : Fancy, choicest, choice, finest, fine, fully superior, superior, fully good, good cargo, fair cargo, common.

There are four leading districts in Formosa : Chap Ko Hoon, Paichie, Sinteam, Chuitngka.

Grading an Uncertainty.

The grading of tea is not a very certain quantity ; the terminology is usually local, applicable to a particular market, and the goods are always sold by sample.

Some tea is grown in Natal, but it is not considered very good and the trade is largely local. They name it golden pekoe, pekoe souchong, flowery pekoe, souchong and other Chinese terms for blacks.

The United States has a tea garden in South Carolina and the product has six classifications, souchong, oolong, suncured, shelter, green, and compressed tablets.

South American Mate.

Mate or yerba-mate is a kind of tea grown extensively in South America, Paraguay, Brazil, and Argentina. The consumption in Latin America is enormous, averaging 14 lbs. per capita, nearly double the largest tea consumption in the world, which is 7¼ lbs. in Australia. On several occasions attempts have been made to introduce it into the northern hemisphere but without success.

In addition to the kinds given above there are scattered throughout the world a couple of hundred or so plants which have been used locally for making tea-like infusions. There is the "camomile tea" of Germany, the "cowslip tea" of Great Britain, the "teamsters' tea" of Arizona, the "revolutionary tea" of New Jersey, the "coffee-leaf tea" of Indasia.

ABOUT TEA OIL.

Very little is known about the oil of tea—an essential or volatile oil—which is supposed to give to tea its peculiar flavor and aroma. Upon the amount of oil contained in the dried leaves depend the strength and pungency of this infusion. It is of a lemon color, lighter in body than water, solidifies easily with cold, and resinifies on exposure to air. It has a strong smell like that of the tea tree. It does not exist in the natural leaf, but appears to be produced during the process of manufacture, and it is possible that more than one kind of oil is produced.

According to Mulder, there is about 0.79 per cent. of oil in green tea, and 0.6 per cent. in black. It is supposed that the difference is caused through the fermentation to which black tea is subjected in the process of manufacture, dissipating the essential oil to a greater extent. The question of the effect of the curing process upon the essential oil — to generate or dissipate or liberate or modify it—is an inquiry of no little interest and consequence, and deserves more chemical investigation than it has received. New tea contains more of the oil than old. Physiologically it exerts a stimulating and intoxicating effect which is so powerful that the Chinese do not use tea until at least a year old. But the Chinese have very extraordinary notions. Occasionally, in Winter, ice is seen at Canton, which they collect and keep under the impression that there must be something very cold in it, and so with respect to tea. They have an idea there is a good deal of fire in new tea, and, therefore, keep it to get rid of the fire, as they suppose. It is a well known fact that green tea produces greater stimulating and intoxicating effects than black tea, which is probably owing to the greater amount of oil contained in the former. The headache and giddiness of which tea-tasters complain, and the attacks of paralysis to which, after a few years, persons employed in packing tea are found to be liable, are due to the action of this oil. The essential oil of tea is the only narcotic agent found in the tea-leaf and infusion.

Tea Plant and Its Bloom.

Production of Oolong Teas

(From the Journal of the Society of Arts.)

In Formosa the leaves used in the preparation of oolong teas are picked by women and children chiefly, and as picked they are placed in closely woven baskets, which are sometimes lined with jute cloth. When delivered by the pickers to the curing house the leaves are spread out in the open air, in the sunshine if possible, on a bamboo mat or in low bamboo trays, and are there stirred every five or seven minutes until the leaves are somewhat wilted, the edges pliable, and signs of fermentation are visible. The length of time required for this depends upon the sun, temperature, and similar conditions. The tea is then placed in bamboo trays, about four pounds in a tray, which are placed in a rack one above the other, with enough space between to permit free circulation of air and to enable the workmen to manipulate the leaves. The leaves are stirred up in these trays at intervals of from seven to twelve minutes as required, the fermentation being regulated and kept as even as possible in this manner.

Fermentation ordinarily is allowed to proceed for about two hours, after which a rack of tea, about 40 pounds of the leaf as a rule, is turned into a large circular bamboo tray and is again stirred and manipulated for two hours more, at the end of which time the edges of the leaf are somewhat dry, reddish brown in color, and have an odor of prepared tea. The leaf is then taken, in lots of four or five pounds, and placed in metal-firing pans over charcoal fires, hot enough to wilt and curl the leaf, giving it the soft, sponge-like quality of damp tea leaves, and enabling it to be rolled, this firing or wilting being accompanied by rapid stirring and tossing the leaf in each pan.

The lot of tea is then turned into a round-bottomed pan fixed in the end of a bench, upon which a workman sits, and the leaf is then rolled by hand to give it something of the form of ordinary country-cured Chinese or Japanese teas. The tea is given a second pan drying, followed by another rolling, and sometimes even by a third rolling and drying, although generally two rollings suffice. This rolling is followed by a drying sufficient to get the leaf in such shape that it can be transported to the firer for export.

This alternate process of drying and rolling varies with the weather, and indeed the whole process depends upon the conditions surrounding the leaf. The American consul at Amoy says that the process takes the green leaf, oxidises or ferments it until the edges turn a reddish brown and the entire leaf is wilted, then wilts the leaf over a fire until it can be rolled to give it form, later drying it for temporary packing. This latter process often includes a light firing in a basket over a charcoal fire.

The tea thus prepared for temporary keeping is known as "green leaf." It is packed in jute bags holding about sixty-six pounds, and is transported to the export firer. The leaf thus packed is dry, but it lacks the brittle condition of the tea as it is received abroad, and generally is much lighter in color than oolong as known to the trade. When received at the firing house it is picked over by women and girls for the removal of stems, dirt, or foreign matter generally. The final firing for export is done in bamboo baskets, giving the name of "basket-fired" to the product.

The firing which produces characteristic oolong is generally done in a medium sized room in some of the great brick buildings in which the large tea establishments are housed. In a firing room, a brick platform about twenty inches high is constructed, in which are round holes about two feet deep and two in diameter, ordinarily about a foot apart, and numbering from 50 to 300, or even 400, in one establishment. In each one of these holes a charcoal fire is built, and the charcoal is burned until all flame disappears, the room becoming a great furnace, into which coolies rush with covered mouths and nostrils to stir the fires and prepare the little furnaces. When finally the charcoal in each hole or furnace becomes a bed of live coals without flame it is covered with charcoal ashes to temper the heat and preserve the fire. The entire room is still hot, and is maintained in that condition for days at a time. Ordinarily it will require perhaps twelve hours to burn the charcoal to a proper condition and have the room at a proper temperature, the covered charcoal giving off a steady heat.

The firing is done in bamboo baskets about three feet high and a little over two feet in diameter, open at both ends, and with a sieve placed a little below the centre as a bottom. Such a basket is placed over an open furnace or hole in the brick platform, and about seven pounds of the green leaf are placed in it. The leaf is practically untouched for about three hours, until the quantity of leaf in the basket has become thoroughly and evenly heated, naturally running through a slight wilting in becoming heated. Firers then pass from basket to basket stirring the leaf, so as to keep the drying process even and regular, ordinarily about an hour between the stirrings being sufficient. It generally requires from seven to twelve hours of such firing to evaporate thoroughly all moisture in the leaf, baskets generally being set in the evening and removed in the morning, the tea being boxed while warm. The firing of the tea also varies for the variety of tea desired, heavily fired teas being desirable for some markets because of the darker infusion they give.

Machine curing of tea has been attempted in Formosa, and the Japanese Government is now supporting an experimental machine plant at Auping, Formosa. It is generally agreed by tea men, however, that the results so far have not been successful or satisfactory from any standpoint, and that the plant is run at a loss. There is no present likelihood of the machine method succeeding that of hand firing. The fact is that while, of course, oolong tea derives more or less of its meritorious qualities from the nature of the leaf itself, there is peculiar merit in the manner in which the leaf is handled, and much depends upon little things which a machine cannot accomplish.

CARE OF SALT FISH.

It often happens that packages of pickled fish are roughly handled in transit when shipped by rail or boat, causing the hoops on barrels, half-barrels and kits to loosen and naturally the pickle leaks out, says the Maritime Merchant. If the packages are left in this condition for a period of five to ten days, the fish are liable to become stained and rusty. It is, therefore, important as soon as mackerel and other kinds of barrel fish are received, to examine the contents of packages, and if they are dry or any of the pickle has leaked out, to make a brine of salt and water, just strong enough to float an egg or potato, and cover the fish with said brine, which will restore the fish to prime condition if attended to immediately.

Barrels and half-barrels of salt and pickled fish when stored should be examined every thirty days, and if packages have leaked any, same should be refilled with brine. Do not pour fresh water into a barrel of fish—this method causes troubles, as it weakens the original brine, and when the pickle is not sufficiently strong to float an egg or potato the fish turn sour. Another important matter regarding all kinds of fish is to keep in a cool place and out of the sun.

DRIED FRUIT IN THE MAKING

There is a lot about dried fruits that the purveyor of food stuffs, wholesale or retail, has little opportunity of learning. Recently one of the largest and most reliable California dried fruit houses wrote to their Toronto representatives, W. G. A. Lambe & Co., a very instructive letter on the subject. It was in part as follows, after a comment on the common lack of information in the trade and its inconvenient results :

Now, at the outset of the discussion of the details of this matter, if you will in your own mind compare our position at this end, so far as securing dried fruit is concerned, with that of the country merchant who takes in butter from the farmers, you will get a very good idea of the situation and of the difficulties that surround our getting hold of the right goods.

In the districts in which we operate all fruit is cured in the sun, and usually by the farmers who grow it. As a natural consequence, the quality of the dried fruit depends largely upon the character of the farmers, for it requires no little care and skill to produce a first-class article, and the percentage of really high-class dried fruit that is produced each year is about the same as the percentage of really good butter as compared with the total amount that is manufactured.

To obtain the best results, the fruit should be fully ripe and picked by hand, not shaken from the trees, as is too often done by farmers, who will not go to the expense of properly picking their fruit.

The fruit is usually cut and pitted by girls, who lay the halves pit side up upon the trays, which are about three feet wide by eight feet long. The trays are immediately placed in the sulphur house, where the fruit is sulphured by the burning of sulphur. The trays are then spread out in the sun, and the fruit is nearly dried. The trays are then stacked and the curing completed in the shade. This method is pursued in the drying of pears, peaches, apricots, plums, nectarines, etc.

In curing prunes, the fruit is permitted to drop, and is never considered fully ripe or in proper condition for drying so long as it hangs on the tree. The fruit is first dipped in a solution of lye in order to break the skin, then washed in cold water, and spread out upon trays in the sun. It is necessary to cut the skin with lye or the fruit will not dry properly.

Prunes are not sulphured, except in the case of ruby prunes which are simply the black French prunes bleached with sulphur.

In our many years' experience in this line we have learned from what varieties of fruit and from which farmers we can get the best results. It is always our aim to handle the crops of men who thin their fruit properly (that is, who pick off all the excess fruit on their trees in order to permit the full development of the fruit remaining) and who carefully pick and properly dry their crops, and such men are scarce as compared with the total number engaged in the fruit business in this state.

The fruit comes to us just as it is taken from the trays, and is run over a grader, which sorts the fruit into the various sizes. This grader is made up of a series of perforated zinc plates, with apertures of the proper size for standard, choice and extra choice. Anything larger than extra choice goes over the end of the grader, and is carefully sorted by hand.

To grade fruit properly, the grader is run very slowly, but it has become a very common custom to reduce grades considerably by increasing the speed of the grader, which throws a percentage of standard fruit into the choice, choice into the extra choice, etc. This is one of the tricks of the trade, and accounts often for a variation in price on the same grade of goods.

After the fruit is graded for size it is graded for quality, for in many instances fruit may be of the proper size, while it lacks style in appearance, in which event it is often necessary to drop it back a grade. This is particularly true of the higher grades.

In grading prunes it is impossible to get an accurate count, and they are blended after grading to get them to the proper size. It has become the custom to fill orders on the seven point ; that is, a 47 is considered a 40-50 prune and a 57 a 50-60 prune, and so on.

Muscatel raisins are simply dried muscat (white) grapes, and are not processed in any way. The grapes when ripe are picked, spread on trays, and after one side of the raisin is cured, another tray is placed upon the top of the raisins, turned over, and the original tray removed. They are then left in the sun until cured.

The large perfect bunches are sorted out when the raisins are taken from the trays, and the balance of the raisins are dumped into sweat boxes, and when delivered to the packing-house are run through a machine somewhat similar to a thresher, which removes the large stems, and the raisins pass over a series of screens which sorts out the various sizes—that is, Seedless Muscatels, Two Crown, Three Crown and Four Crown Loose. It has always been our custom to hand-sort the Four Crown, for it is, of course, in the nature of things that Four Crown, being the large grapes, would take longer to cure properly, and if the grapes were left until the Four Crown were entirely cured, the smaller sizes would be excessively dried, and we find it necessary to sort out and re-dry any large berries not fully cured.

The grading of raisins is susceptible of much manipulation, and this has been a source of considerable profit to unscrupulous packers, who quote what are apparently lower prices than those of the reliable handlers. A very slight difference in the size of the screens, and but little increased speed of the grader will easily make from ¼ to ½-cent difference in price.

Before crops were as large as they are at the present time, the fruit was shipped, with the possible exception of prunes, exactly as it came from the growers, that is, in dry, original condition, but competition of late years has become so keen that many abuses have crept in, notably the manipulation of grades and the excessive addition of water, to bring down the price.

This processing is usually done by dipping in either hot or cold water, which increases the weight, and resulphuring, in order to retain the color. This affects the eating quality of the fruit.

When processing we do but little more than sterilize the fruit, and if there is anything that can be said in favor of this method, we can say that it will go a long way toward preventing the fruit from becoming wormy during the hot weather, as it effectually puts an end to all eggs and moths.

Standard peaches, faced with choice, and branded "choice" ; 25-lb. boxes that will not weigh gross to exceed 25 to 27 lbs., are also methods used to reduce the price. In other words, the punishment is made to fit the crime. If the current market price on peaches is 6 cents, and some one wants a choice peach at 5½ cents, it is really no trouble to make it.

Now, we have found in long years' experience in this line of business that the only way we can build up a trade that is at all permanent for ourselves, and at the same time for the jobber, is to try to supply good dried fruit. You will agree with us that, after all, the question of the quality of the goods is finally passed upon by the consumer. It is not a question of what you or we want, but what does the consumer want, and what will please him so that he will ask for the same thing the second time? This thought is paramount in our minds.

SUGARS LIMITED.

Progress of an Enterprising Canadian Firm.

Among the younger firms of Montreal that have sprung into prominence during the past few years is Sugars Limited. A Grocer representative on invitation recently paid a visit to their new factory and premises, corner Parthenais and St. Catherine streets, and the visit was an object lesson of what can be done by system, enterprise and push. Three years ago this business was started by Mr. Gardiner and Mr. C. A. McMillan, in a small, unpretentious factory on St. Therese street. Subsequently formed into a joint stock company, it has through the untiring energy, perseverance and management of Mr. Gardiner and the judicious application of the president, Mr. McMillan, developed to such an extent that it may be said that it is of its kind the largest, best equipped and most carefully planned factory in Canada. Mr. Gardiner has long been connected with this particular branch of trade, the maple syrup, sugar and maple products industry of Canada, and his reputation for push and up-to-date ideas and methods has made him a well known and welcome figure among the jobbing trade of the country.

In company with Mr. McMillan and Mr. Gardiner, a tour of inspection was made of the new factory and a description of the plant will be of interest to the readers of The Grocer and the company's many customers. Situated as the plant is on practically three streets, St. Catherine, Parthenais and De Montigny, the ground space covers an area of over 100,000 square feet, while the main building, which is three storeys and basement, covers over 50,000 square feet. This building has seven large receiving and two shipping doors and the loading and unloading is on a level with the delivery trucks, thus saving a lot of hoisting and extra handling. The main floor of the factory is a double one, the top and newer floor being of hardwood, laid on latest principles looking to endurance and cleanliness. The syrup boiling and jam and jelly rooms on the second and third floors are models of arrangement and utility, both sections being laid with heavy concrete and the kettles sunk into three feet of solid concrete masonry. This is a feature installed by Mr. Gardiner as it permits of the highest cleanliness and washing down of floors every evening without the slightest chance of any foreign matter entering the kettles and receiving tanks. The floors all slope to the centre, where a drain carries off anything accumulating in the course of the day's work. The walls of every room where manufacturing is done are painted white and are regularly washed and cleaned. In fact, the entire premises devoted to the preparation of the company's products are arranged on the most approved hygienic principles, and with the care exercised by the managers and foremen and forewomen of the different departments, cleanliness is positively assured. To the reporter Mr. Gardiner said: "Our factory is open at all times for inspection and we cordially invite all dealers and others interested in our products to visit the premises and to see for themselves how carefully and hygienically our goods are prepared."

The large warerooms and storage flats were being rapidly filled with fruit, fruit pulp, bottles, jars, tins, cans, kegs and barrels. In the pulp room over $25,000 worth of raspberry, strawberry and other fruits had already been prepared and housed ready for putting up in season. Carloads of peaches, grapes and plums were coming in and being prepared for reserve storage. This feature, the putting up of pure fruit jams, jellies and juices, is one of the latest additions to the company's products and promises to be a revelation to the trade. Sugars Limited, have been known far and wide as manufacturers of maple sugar, maple syrup and kindred products and the Diamond Brand maple syrup and their patented and original Twin Block pure maple sugar are too well known to dealers to need particular reference in this sketch.

The boiler and engine room, which, by the way, is at the extreme end of the plant, is large and lately equipped with a new 50 horse-power Corliss engine At the end of the boiler room is an artesian well, 350 feet deep. This feature is worth referring to owing to its uniqueness and the fact that absolutely pure spring water is only used in manufacture where its use is found necessary.

Large and well-lighted offices with a large concreted vault are situated on Parthenais street at the northern end of the main building. In the large yard space, and removed about 50 yards from the factory proper, are the storage sheds and stables and coal bunkers, all of them arranged for prompt loading, unloading and handling of supplies, while the yard area itself is large enough for another factory 300 ft. by 150 ft. Toilet and wardrobes and lunch rooms have been provided for the help and in this, too, order, system and cleanliness are the striking characteristics.

Though Sugars Limited, have only been established about three years the development has been remarkable and agencies have been established in all the larger Canadian business centres, as well as an opening established in Great Britain, and with the push and brains that are behind the concern Montreal may well feel proud of Sugars Limited.

An Ideal Grocery Store

Sherbrooke, P.Q., situated at the junction of the St. Francis and Magog Rivers, is one of those Canadian cities that appeals to the hard-headed business man and manufacturer and the lover of romantic scenery alike, to the former for its location in the midst of a prosperous thriving community, and its available water-power and to the latter for its really romantic and beautiful natural environments. The St. Francis River on either side has high sloping banks, beautifully wooded and studded with fine residences, parks and ornamental public edifices, churches, hospital and schools. The turbulent Magog tumbling its three hundred feet or more has been harnessed into something like submission to do the will of man for its rushing waters in their descent to join its more placid sister stream, turns many a wheel of industry. Within a stone's throw of where the Magog makes its last and final plunge stands the model store of May & Houlahan, grocers and importers. The two photographs presented herewith give but a general idea of the exterior and interior of this establishment, the personal view is one that is bound to remain impressed on the observer. Two large plate glass windows, both with three sides are built out to the street line. The right window, owing to the fact that the building is built on the street slope has a unique sub-window with an arched plate glass,—this arrangement practically gives two window floors for advertising and display. The lower window during the evening is lit up by cleverly arranged electric lights showing up the package goods so tastefully arranged.

With the upper windows also well-dressed and illuminated the attractive power is very much enhanced. In the window to the left of the door May & Houlahan have arranged a fountain whose trays are filled with vegetables and greens and the gentle and well-regulated spray from the fountain keeps the lettuce, celery and other greens beautifully fresh, bright and tempting to the eye of the consumer. The proprietors have been highly complimented by their customers for this attractive and practical arrangement and that their business in this line has been enormously increased and more satisfactorily done they take pleasure in admitting. As a drawing advertisement it is difficult to excel.

The interior of the store is wide and arranged with a view to prompt and ready service. The left side on entering is devoted to biscuits, cakes, fruits, etc., while the rear end of the store is taken up with the large refrigerator and cured meat department. A feature on entering on the right front is the arrangement of the flavoring extract and fancy grocery department in a large and handsome show case or cabinet. The offices for book-keeper and cashier are at the back.

May & Houlahan are both young men, though of many years' experience in the grocery trade. They are successors to T. W. Fuller & Son, one of Sherbrooke's oldest grocers and now a prominent manufacturer in the city. E. H. May having been seven years and F. P. Houlahan twelve years with Fuller & Son in the same stand. Both gentlemen are thorough grocers, posted in all branches of general and fancy groceries, and possess the qualities that go to make success—attentiveness, promptness and politeness. They are watchful of their customers' requirements and interests and keen buyers, watching the markets and on the look-out for new lines and ideas, and close observers of the trade barometer as portrayed in the Canadian Grocer and other trade Journals. With these qualities it is not hard to argue that they enjoy the confidence and support of Sherbrooke's desirable customers. Dealing in staple groceries they are also noted for their fancy table delicacies, importing the finest English, French and American specialties direct. Truly it may be said that May & Houlahan possess an ideal Grocery Store and The Grocer is pleased to present the accompanying photos to its readers.

LAMPS AND NEW DESIGNS

With the coming of electricity into common use for lighting purposes there have also come new styles and designs for fixtures, so that each succeeding year has eclipsed the previous one in the creation of striking and novel designs. But the old coal oil lamp has not been forgotten by those who have lavished their art and taxed their ingenuity in the endeavor to bring out new designs in lamps and their accessories. In coal oil lamps, one of the newest lines to be brought on the Canadian market is the beaded fringe, reception lamp. They are made in different styles, but each one is a handsome and useful ornament. A particular feature of these lamps is the glass beaded fringe which is suspended from the shade. These fringes are made in clear and tinted glass, and have a softening effect upon the light without materially lessening its power. These fringes are about four inches in length, and do not add any emcumbrance either in appearance or weight.

These lamps are made in styles adaptable to the furnishings of any room. The Dutch style is quaint and artistic, with its delicate tints, and its painting typifying the peasant life of Holland. For an odd piece, or for a room furnished in the Dutch style which is now so popular, this lamp gives a grace and finish that few pieces of furniture give. Then there are the Art Noveau and the Rookwood, which are adaptable to any drawing or reception room, giving out a soft, mellow light from their colored shades and fringes. The Cathedral or Mission design stands alone in uniqueness of color and style. It is a deep, rich red, plain and simple in ornamentation. Its color scheme can best be described by calling it tesselated. Irregular black lines divide the red squares. For a den, or a room furnished in the Mission style, this lamp would have a beautiful effect when lighted.

Considering the value of these lamps the price is not excessive, and some of the cheaper styles could well be stocked by the country store, particularly in the Christmas season. From four to twelve dollars is the range, and for the smaller price some nice lamps can be had.

INVERTED GAS LIGHT.

But not only are new designs in lamps being brought out largely this year; new methods of lighting have also been evolved. Experiments with a new lighting system have been carried out in Scotland in which kerosene oil is used. The oil is stored in a tank, which is attached to the base of the standard carrying the lamp. In the top of this reservoir is a cylinder filled with compressed carbonic acid gas, with a small oil container at the bottom holding from one-half to two gallons of oil, which automatically flows thereto from the larger receptacle. A reducing valve connects the oil container with the carbonic acid cylinder, and a small tube leads to the burner, which has a vaporizer consisting of a jet and an air-mixing chamber, while the burner is fitted with an incandescent gas mantle. The oil is forced from the oil container to the vaporizer through the small tube by the pressure of the carbonic acid gas. On reaching the vaporizer the oil is converted into gas and passes through the flame spreader where it combines with the air, and thence to the incandescent mantle. The lamp is economical in consumption, a light of 200 candle power being obtained for 45 hours with a consumption of one gallon of oil. The light is said to be clear, bright, and of great penetrative power.

Care of Lamps.

The care of lamps is a simple thing, yet many serious conflagrations have been caused by the explosion or upsetting of a lamp. Cleanliness is the surest safeguard in the care of lamps, as it is only a dirty, congested lamp that is ever known to explode. A burner that is kept clean radiates heat, while a dirty burner conducts the heat to the lamp. If the wick is too small the flame will travel down the tube; if there is a leak at the collar, escaping gas ignites, and if the burner has been removed for the purpose of filling the lamp after it has been burning the gas within the globe expands and may reach a nearby light.

New Cylinder Lamp.

In gas lighting one of the newest lamps out is the Humphrey nickel cylinder lamp. The cylinder ventilator gives added draft and promotes combustion efficiency, as well as keeping out moths and dust or anything that tends to injure the mantles. This lamp requires no match or taper to light it. There is a minute gas jet burning continually which ignites the main jet upon pulling one of the small chains. This small jet becomes extinct when the large light starts up, but ignites again by the action of putting out the large light. For stairs, hotels and public buildings this is an admirable lamp.

Inverted Lights.

The inverted gas light is constantly growing in public favor and the wonder is that it was not brought into more general use before. One of the chief advantages of the inverted gas mantle is that there is no shadow thrown from it, and hence no necessity of adjusting in order to get the direct rays of the light. Then there are decorative results possible with the inverted light that cannot be had with the regular light. This point can be appreciated more in the cluster lights, and grouped lights for large rooms. The accompanying cut shows one of the pretty effects of the inverted lights in a very popular style of hall or reception lanterns suspended from the ceiling with a chain.

Emancipation of the Grocer

President Bischoff, of the New York Grocers' Association, addressing the state convention recently said in part on the subject of the power of association and the emancipation of the grocer:

Why the grocers as a class should be so indifferent to their own good it is hard to understand, but it is a lamentable fact that they are.

There is power in association, and the proof of it is before our eyes every day, yet it is the hardest thing to get some grocers to join an association, at least in our city.

As I have stated before, men have combined for good or evil since time immemorial, and at the present day we have the outgrowth of this tendency in the large commercial corporations, gigantic trusts and combinations of immense capital.

There is power in association, and I would like to have every grocer in every city and every town of this state be a member of an association. He ought to be, and should be a power in the community, in his own city or town, and in conjuration with the sister association, he ought to be a power in the State of New York.

Why should not some of our members have seat and voice in our city councils, and in the legislation halls at Albany? Are there not men among us well able to fill almost any public office? Would not your president and the members of your board of directors, and many a one from your midst, make as good and better public officer than many a one elected?

I would like to see this association a strong and a powerful body and a mighty factor in the State of New York, whose advice would be asking and whose wishes would be consulted, whose just demands would be complied with, and whose influence would be felt, not alone and not so much in politics, but in all matters pertaining to the public good, and to the welfare of the people.

Let us try to emancipate ourselves, let us break away from antiquated customs and habits, and to inaugurate reforms. Let us get out of the rut. Let us try to elevate the standard of our trade, and lift it to a higher plane. Let us try to teach every grocer that only in unity there is strength, and that to accomplish anything we must hold together, stand together and work together. We cannot do singly or individually, we must join hands with our fellow grocers; to bring about reforms it takes the combined effort of all members of our trade.

There is more than enough work on hand, so let us set to work and do it. We have the peddler nuisance, the horse thieves nuisance, dead beats, unfair competitors, price cutting, jealousy among our own members, long business hours, the question of impure milk and spices, unjust discrimination of the manufacturer between the ordinary retailer and the chain store keeper, and other evils that beset our trade on all sides. Let us keep up the fight, and not throw our gems away; success must eventually come.

Let us go out and spread the gospel of association, and when you succeed in building up an organization that counts every grocer in every city, town and hamlet in this state for a member, an active member who will not shirk his duty, you will then have an association that will be a power and a factor.

FISH BUSINESS ON THE ATLANTIC COAST

Its Weaknesses, the Causes, and the Remedies

By C. H. Whitman, of Canso, N.S., for the Canadian Grocer.

We are told that this is Canada's growing time and we rejoice to know that the Dominion is enjoying a period of great prosperity. We read of increased imports and exports—of thousands of emigrants coming in and bringing much wealth with them—of transcontinental railroads projected and building, and of existing railroads increasing their mileage—of the population of our cities increasing by leaps and bounds and the little hamlet becoming a busy, populous mart where thousands congregate — of land values going up and fortunes made thereby—of bank and savings bank deposits increasing at a marvellous rate and bank clearings showing evidence of a prodigious increase in the general volume of business—we read of all these things and know that they are true of this Canada of ours, and we rejoice, but down in these provinces by the sea the conviction clings to us that whatever the magician's wand may have done for the west in bringing about such wonderful transformations it has brought nothing startling, nothing phenomenal to these Lower Provinces, and we wonder when our turn will come.

Some of us are growing grey and are beginning to see the end from the beginning, but the dreams we had in our youth of development and growth have not been realized. Our fathers prospered and so have we, but only in a moderate way and by dint of the strictest economy and the closest attention to business. We are probably as happy as the more prosperous, perhaps happier, but we are not content. The desire for development is in our blood and will not be denied, and the swift-footed years remind us that what we have to do must be done quickly, because there is "no work nor labor nor device in the grave whither we go."

Catching and Curing Fish.

We who are here to-day are perhaps more interested in the business of catching, curing and marketing fish than in any other industry. Possibly we were born to it and have followed it through all the intervening years. We have seen splendid possibilities in it and have had an earnest and honest desire to realize some of those possibilities. We realized that the methods employed were crude and inefficient, that in catching, in curing and preparing for market and in marketing we had much to learn and were willing to learn it. We can congratulate ourselves on having accomplished something, but we realize that much remains to be done before perfection shall have been reached.

We are connected with a business that is subject to great extremes of success or failure, and often the lean years consume the fat ones. Probably very few businesses are subject to such sudden and violent fluctuations. It is a story as old as history. Even the Disciples on the Sea of Galilee had to exclaim, "We have toiled all night and have caught nothing." The winds, the waves, the ocean currents, the caprices of the fish and of the bait by means of which some of them are caught and upon which all of them feed all combine at times to rob the fisherman of the reward of his toil. We are not sure that it is desirable that it should be otherwise. The very conditions that exist are a school for the development of strong men, hardy, self-reliant, resourceful, brave men, men who are capable of grappling with difficulties and overcoming them, fitted for the task of wresting from nature her choicest secrets and developing themselves in the performing of the task. The native of the tropics who sits down and lets the fruit drop into his lap knows nothing of the joy of conquest and misses the mental and moral development that comes to the conqueror. He is weak, effeminate and possibly bad, a laggard in the task of working out the world's destiny, for this is, after all, what we, consciously or unconsciously, are doing. Whether we know it or not we are helping or hindering in the working out of a problem, and every man who resolutely faces a difficulty and overcomes it has made himself a better factor in the working out of that problem. Let us be glad that things are not too easy for us, that we are engaged in a business that presents difficulties to be overcome, problems to be solved, losses and disappointments to be bravely borne, as well as possibilities of success and development that encourage us to greater and more persistent effort.

Bad Times for Fisher Folk.

Our Nova Scotia fishermen have not been having a good time of late. In some localities this year there has been a fair measure of success achieved, and this applies chiefly to the shore west of Halifax, along which coast unusual catches of mackerel and herrings and a fair run of line fish have contributed to make the season a successful one for shore fishermen, but to the banking fleet of Lunenburg County and the whole coast from Halifax east to Cape North the season might almost be called a disastrous one. The lobster catch has been small, the weather in the early part of the season rough, bait has been phenomenally scarce and the catch of cod, haddock, pollock, mackerel and herring a failure along the most of the coast. The fisherman has "toiled all night and has caught nothing."

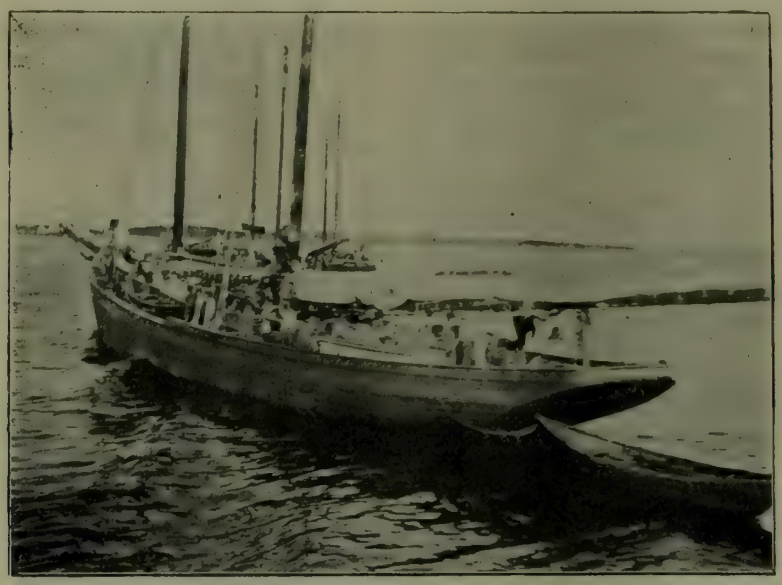
So far as the Lunenburg banking fleet is concerned last year was but little better than this in its results, and many of the men who make up the crews and some of the owners are saying, "We cannot stand this—we must find some other means of making a living," and when a man gives the best months of the year to a business and returns to his family with nothing laid in for the lean and hungry months to come he may be forgiven if he is ready to abandon a business that will not or does not afford him and those dependent upon him a means of living.

No Provision for Lean Years.

This is bad enough, but it is not all. An occasional depression is liable to come to any business and the provident will, in times of prosperity, lay up for the lean years, if the business they follow will admit of it. A more discouraging feature of the business lies in the fact that the average earnings of our fishermen scarcely admit of their making much provision in prosperous years for years of diminished income that are sure to follow. This is emphatically true of the fishermen manning the banking fleet of the County of Lunenburg and of a large part of the coast outside of Lunenburg County. No one can charge the Lunenburg fisherman with being improvident. He is an example for us all in the careful, saving way in which he husbands his resources and makes the most of his yearly income. Many of us with our more expensive, free-handed way of living would feel at a loss to know how to live on an income that would more than suffice for the more careful, prudent Lunenburg fisherman, who thinks himself well off if he finds that his Summer's work has cleared him $300, and seldom reaches that amount.

Outside the County of Lunenburg there are hundreds, probably thousands, along our coast whose annual income seldom exceeds $300, and whose more expensive, less thrifty habits keep the wolf at the door during the most of even a long lifetime. There are exceptions. Almost every community has its exceptions, and there are communities, particularly in the western end of the province, where the fishing population is marked by a superior intelligence, a laudable ambition to excel and an energy in the prosecution of their business that will not be denied, and makes them easy leaders in the business they have put their hands to. The same intelligence, the same ambition and the same energy would make them successful anywhere if success were possible, and it must be admitted, with some sense of humiliation, that in too many instances our fishermen have only themselves to blame if the fishermen of the western end of the province are leaving them behind. They have no better fishing grounds and perhaps no better markets, and are often hampered by a swift-flowing Bay of Fundy current that will only let them fish at the slack of the tide, and yet they get more out of the water, man for man, than do the fishermen more favored by nature. There is this to be said, their proximity to the Boston market and intimate contact with the pushing, aggressive fishermen of the coast of Massachusetts are factors in their favor that are, to some extent, denied to others.



A Banker Waiting for Bait in Canso Harbor.

What is the Remedy?

Perhaps we have said enough about existing conditions. Where shall we find a remedy for evils that exist? How shall the fisherman make his business less of a lottery, his income larger and more assured? Shall he abandon his calling and seek under other skies and in an entire change of occupation and surroundings a means of livelihood denied him here? There are some countries that are good countries to leave. A man living in Iceland, Greenland, or on the coast of Labrador might wisely seek Summer skies and more pleasing surroundings. A citizen of Russia to-day might be forgiven if he left such a home of the oppressed and down-trodden and sought under a foreign flag the peace, security and plenty denied him in the land of his birth. Many in Eastern Canada are immigrating to the great Northwest, and under entirely new conditions but the same old flag, are seeking to better their condition. Many thousands of our people have crossed the boundary line and sought in the United States a betterment of their condition. Many have succeeded there—many have not. The caves of ocean hold the whitened bones of many of Nova Scotia's sons who left home, light-hearted and hopeful, to find naught but an early grave. Is Canada so poor in natural resources, her future so lacking in promise of material development, that we must leave her behind for the life of an alien under a foreign flag?

Are these provinces by the sea so incapable of satisfying a reasonable ambition and their future so dark and forbidding that the training of years must be thrown away and men who have ploughed the sea abandon it for the ploughing and seeding of the prairie whose rolling surface is not less monotonous and lonesome than the surface of old ocean? We hesitate to give any such advice. We know that even the farmer has his troubles—that for him as for others "moth and rust corrupt and thieves break through and steal." We have not forgotten there have been years when the grasshopper and the locust consumed every green thing, and that frost and drought are liable at any time to step in and scatter disaster and disappointment over the fertile prairies of the west.

Stay and Seek a Way.

We need not belittle those fertile plains. They are ours, a part of our God-given heritage and destined to support a prosperous and happy population which will furnish a market some day for our product of the sea. Let us not, without more reason than at present exists, "fly from the ills we have to those we know not of." Let us rather inquire diligently how we may make the incomes of our fishing population larger and more assured, carrying about with us always the conviction that the time is coming when Canada, with 50,000,000 of people within her borders, shall furnish a ready and profitable market for our products, when the west will contribute to the wealth and prosperity of the east and pay back the millions we have spent in opening up that magnificent country and making its development possible. How may the business be developed and made more profitable and at the same time be given a steadiness and evenness not now possible ?

First, concentrate.

It is not for the interest of the fishing industry or the individuals who carry it on that they should be scattered along a line of coast in isolated settlements sparsely populated. It is clear that much of the unprogressive character of the industry is due to the fact that a large part of our fishing population lacks the stimulus and strength that numbers afford. The small, isolated communities along our coast possess few educational advantages, seldom come into contact with the outside world, get few newspapers and fewer books and do not know as they should what is going on abroad. They seldom get in touch with the well informed, the intelligent and the ambitious from whom they might catch inspiration, and too often believe that they know all about the business they are pursuing, and that the methods they employ and which their fathers employed are all that could be desired. The result is we have a lot of unambitious, unprogressive people, satisfied with themselves and their present attainments, difficult to move out of the ruts in which they and their fathers have run, and looking with suspicion upon every new thing. They resent any intimation that there may be a more excellent way as a personal affront, and are hopelessly wedded to the past.

Larger Centres of Population.

We say, get them together into larger communities, communities having the best possible educational advantages, the freest possible intercourse with the world, the best possible connections with the markets of the world. It is easy to say "get them together," but on the face of it the task looks a difficult one. Fortunately, that we may not be without hope, there is a natural though sometimes unrecognized tendency in this direction. The young particularly are attracted by the life and stir of business found in the larger centres of trade, and it is this that has enabled Gloucester and Boston to steal from us so many of our young men, too often to their undoing. The fact that such centres afford a ready market and quick returns forms, and always will form, an additional attraction, and so, after all, the task of promoting this movement is not so difficult as it appears at first sight.

The tendency in the fish business, and in fact almost every business, is toward centralization. It has been particularly noticeable on the coast of England and Scotland, where the business has reached its highest development. The fishermen have abandoned the outlying coves and harbors to a very considerable extent and concentrated themselves in centres such as Aberdeen, Grimsby and Hull, while places where, at one time, a flourishing industry was carried on, are now practically deserted. The village of Findon, in Scotland, which gave the name to the now popular finnan haddies, has gone out of the business altogether, we believe, and it is now carried on at the above mentioned centres ; even London is coming in for a share of the business. In 1902 Aberdeen alone sold two million dollars' worth of the toothsome haddie.

Lobster Fishermen and Their Fleet.

Fishing Board's Report.

In their report for 1899 the Fishing Board of Scotland, discussing this tendency to centralization, says : "Various causes are at work in bringing about such a result, the principal being the great facilities at the larger ports for landing fish at any state of the tide, their disposal at a market where there is keen competition among a large number of buyers, and the rapid means of transit to the large industrial centres. Some few years ago Dundee was practically dependent upon other ports for its fish supply, but since the development of the trawling industry in Scotland the authorities there have taken steps to attract trawlers to their port by providing better facilities for landing fish and disposing of it to the best advantage. Harbor and market accommodation is also being extended and improved at the other fishing ports, notably Aberdeen, Fraserburgh and Peterhead. The net and line fishermen on the east coast are altogether dependent on the industry for their livelihood, and in years of bad results they have no other occupation which they can engage in to supplement their earnings in the immediate vicinity. In the neighborhood of large towns, however, they not only possess the superior facilities connected with the following of their ordinary occupation, but far greater opportunities of supplementing their earnings in bad years. It can hardly be expected that each little fishing community is to be provided with a deep harbor and the market accommodation and railway facilities provided at the larger centres, where the revenue derived from the industry is so considerable."

As an instance of the same tendency on the English coast as we have observed on the coast of Scotland, we may cite the fact that in 1899 there were 34 steam trawlers and 4 steam carriers left Fleetwood, which is a place of considerable importance, and went to Hull because of the greater advantages it afforded.

Fish Can be Better Marketed.

There is another advantage to be derived from concentration. Fresh fish deteriorate rapidly in being rehandled and those landed along the coast at isolated points and reshipped on coasting steamers or by rail to the point where orders are filled and the fish are despatched to their ultimate destination, are almost certain to have deteriorated because of the repeated handling. We can testify from a long experience that they are seldom satisfactory. It is a settled conviction among those who are familiar with the business that, to as great an extent as possible, they should be brought direct from sea to the point where distribution begins.

We have enlarged at some length, and at the risk of being tedious, upon this tendency to centralization and its advantages because we believe it to be desirable in dealing with questions of this sort to get at the general trend of things, in order that we may not be found working against the natural course of business instead of with it, and because we have an abiding conviction that the fishing industry will never show satisfactory development while distributed along the coast in a hundred little hamlets, none of which are able to give it the facilities needed or the "esprit de corps" without which it must necessarily languish.

Better Control of Capital.

The pursuing of this policy will necessarily mean the death knell of boat fishing except from the larger centres and in a limited way, and we are quite willing to accept the alternative. In fact, other things being equal, it must be an advantage to have the control of the capital of the business—we do not say its ownership—in fewer hands. It is not given to every man to have the knowledge, the judgment, the energy, the combination of desirable qualities that should go to make up a master among men, controlling the capital of the country and directing its enterprises. These gifts are but for the few and to the few so gifted should be entrusted the conduct of our enterprises. There are hundreds of fishermen along our coast, their own masters for weal or woe, depending upon their own judgment and controlling their own destiny and destiny of those associated with them, who go blundering along through life, in some cases lazy, in others stupid, in others ignorant, in others willing and bright enough but only fitted to obey, and yet these men are controlling the capital employed in the business and shaping its destiny. The fish business, so far as they control it, must of necessity be largely a failure, bringing little credit to the country and but small returns to those engaged in it.

How much better it would be if the intelligent, well informed, capable men could be put in charge and the helpless and incompetent be subject to their rule. Put them in boats and there are not enough to go round, and, in addition to that fact, they are cramped and hampered by their environment. They are fitted for a larger sphere. "Big ships may venture more, little ships must keep near shore." The fact that the boat is restricted to a limited area tells against its success. It may not always go where fish are obtainable. It is like an animal tethered in a pasture. The rope says, "Thus far shalt thou go, the rich field beyond is not for you." Surely there is a more excellent way.

Small Boats and Large.

The net fisherman moors his nets within easy reach of the boat in which he tends them, lets the tide stretch them till every mesh is closed and says to the fish, "Come to my net." The master of the steam drifter with his 50 or 60 nets in a fleet, knowing that a migrating river of mackerel and herrings periodically passes along our coast east or west according to the season, sends his smart steamboat out into the stream perhaps 50 miles from the coast and throwing his string of nets across the track of the fish with every mesh standing open and ready for the prey, drifts with them until daylight and then hauls in his harvest from the sea. He is not always successful—that would be too good—but he is oftener successful than the man who anchors his nets along the shore and only captures the stragglers from the main body of the fish. That the drifter can be successful has been demonstrated thousands of times along the shores of the British Isles and will be demonstrated along the coast of Nova Scotia as soon as our people wake up to the splendid possibilities involved and capital comes forward to make the business possible.

Fish Drying Yard, Canso.

Hook and Line Men.

So much for net fishing. What about the fish that are usually caught with hook and line?

If the fishing population is to be concentrated, and we believe this to be inevitable and wholesome, it follows that boat fishing with hook and line will have to be superseded by some other means of capture. This is the less to be deplored because of the fact that the inshore fishing, both by means of nets and by hook and line, has ceased to be as profitable as it once was, though there may be exceptions in particular places. Just why this is so it is difficult to determine. Some blame the thousands of lobster traps, some the increased traffic by steamer and sailing ship, others blame the pollution of rivers and towns finding its way into the sea. That the fact exists few will deny, and it looks as though the inshore fishery is destined to become a negligable factor in the supply.

The modern fish business may be roughly divided into two departments, the "fresh" and the "salt," the former including smoked and canned fish as well as those marketed in a perfectly fresh condition. In the fresh fish business, and with special reference to the stock marketed in a perfectly fresh condition, there must be a regular weekly supply if the business is to be conducted in a profitable and satisfactory way. The bulk of the business is done on Thursday and the morning of Friday in each week. If the city dealer misses his supply for those days his week's business is spoiled and he will soon turn away from a supplier on the coast who repeatedly fails to insure him his needed stock.

Steam Trawler the Solution.

We believe that for the supplying of the fresh fish trade the steam trawler such as is now operated by British fishermen comes nearer to the ideal than any other means now employed. The bait question (a very serious one) is eliminated, the boat makes a straight road to and from the fishing grounds regardless of winds or the absence of them, timing her arrival at the home port almost to the hour desired, and there being no dories to launch in rough weather she can fish as long as she can steam ahead and in weather that would prohibit entirely the launching of the frail dory so much in evidence with us. She is equipped with a triangular bag net perhaps 120 feet in length and 80 feet across the open end, at the corners of which are attached "otter boards" about 4½ feet square, the object of which is to keep the mouth of the bag distended. To these otter boards from 500 to 1,000 fathoms of wire hawser are attached from either quarter of the ship, and the net, dragged along the bottom by the steamer, scoops up all that comes in its way. At intervals the net is hauled on board, the contents of the "cod end" are dumped on the deck, the marketable fish are taken care of, and the residue, a motley assortment of about all the fishes that haunt the bottom of the sea but do not furnish food for man, is thrown again into the sea, perhaps to endure the same experience many times in a fish's life, demonstrating in a somewhat unusual way that it is worth something to be worthless.

Rise and Fall of a Fleet.

Fifty years ago the port of Grimsby, in England, had five sailing smacks engaged in the fishing business. Since then the fleet grew to 1,000 such vessels, about the size of our fishing vessels and just as seaworthy, but they have all passed away, have been superseded by trawling steamers of which Grimsby and Hull have about 1,000 to-day, worth about $25,000,000, abd Aberdeen some 300 or 400, the growth of 29 years. Other ports own many of these steamers and not a month passes but numerous trawlers such as these, nearly all splendid steel boats from 120 to 140 feet long with triple expansion engines and boilers carrying from 180 to 200 pounds pressure, many of them equipped with up-to-date cold storage plants, electric lights and every known appliance for their business, are added to the fleet.

When Nova Scotia can boast of such a fleet we shall have something to boast of, and our conviction is that as the fresh fish business of Canada develops it will be found necessary to employ vessels such as these, or better if such can be obtained. It is useless to say that they cannot be operated or that our sea bottom is unsuitable. There is no marked difference between the fishing grounds on this side of the Atlantic and those on the other side. Only recently a French trawler equipped as these British vessels are, and of the largest size, has been fishing within 50 miles of Canso, and was reported when last heard from to hail for 5,000 quintals of salted fish. This, too, in an off year, when Nova Scotia fishermen are going home with broken voyages.

Less Costly Might Do.

It is not quite clear that for salt fishing so expensive a vessel, costing perhaps $40,000, is necessary. We would incline to the opinion that a wooden vessel of from 300 to 350 tons, rigged as a three-masted schooner, short sparred, and with stump toe-masts that she may rise easily, equipped with an up-to-date cold storage plant and with sufficient cold storage room to hold bait enough for the voyage and carrying, say, ten dories with their equipment of hook and line gear would be preferable. There would be no running about searching for bait, no lying in harbors for a month or six weeks of long Summer days at a time waiting for it, as is too often done by our fishermen. Bait would frequently be found on the fishing grounds in sufficient quantity to enable the vessel so equipped to return to port loaded to the gunwale and with her supply of bait intact ready for another voyage. Such a vessel would not be too large for the business. Ships of 1,000 tons are frequently employed in the Grand Bank fishery by the fishermen of Old France. Surely a vessel of one-third that size would not be too large.

Capital the Second Requirement.

In view of what has been said may we not give capital as the second requirement for making the business profitable and at the same time giving it a steadiness and evenness not now possible? Perhaps not much more capital than is now employed, so far as the salt fish business is concerned. Might it not mean rather a wiser and better use of the capital now employed with enough of additional capital to furnish the cold storage equipment needed? We commend the suggestion to the thoughtful, enterprising men now interested in the business, of whom we have so many. Surely there is a more excellent way than the hand-to-mouth methods now employed—methods which have broken down under trial and demonstrated to every one their insufficiency.

The fisheries of these provinces are not a hopeless failure, they are but in their infancy. Let the same intelligence and courage that have given to Nova Scotians a world-wide reputation on sea and land and placed them often in the front of the world's workers be applied to the solution of our fisheries and we need not fear for the result. We are ready to predict that the time is not far distant when the descendants of the men who carried the British flag on Nova Scotia ships into every port in the world will demonstrate their ability to make their conduct of our North Atlantic fisheries the envy of our neighbors and a source of pride and satisfaction to every patriotic Canadian—when Canadian shipyards will be called upon to build and Canadian fishermen to man a fleet of fishing steamers and fishing schooners far and away in advance of anything we have now afloat, and the fishing fleet of Great Britain shall find itself reproduced and improved upon in the ports of Nova Scotia.

THE WORMY APPLE.

(By the Khan.)

"Them King apples won't be ripe till the snow flies," quoth Old Twilight.

"Why, uncle," cried Sir Ann's eldest boy, "there's some ripe already."

"Each one uv them has a worm in it" frowned Old Twilight. "I take notice," he continued, with a wink at Aunt Lucy, "that this here dang codlin' moth don't confine all his attention to the apple crop. He seems to hev a likin' fer the human fambly. When I see a precocious youngster who is smarter nor all creation, I says to myself, 'Me pore chee-ild, the codlin' moth has bin at you an' you'll drop off into the grass one uv these days, an' the pig'll eat you, shore thing.'

"When I see a young girl what ought to be in short dresses with her hair hanging down her back, and learnin' her lessons an' helpin' her maw—when I see her flyin' round with beaus and talkin about gittin' married, I look the little hussy over an' say to myself, 'There's a codlin' moth ripenin' you up all right, sweet Juliet, an' the fust thing you know you'll be skinned and strung up behind the stove fer dried apples.'

"When I see a feller elected to Parliament start in from the word go to run his country on improved principles, I know it's only a case of codlin' moth—he is prematurely ripe, an'll soon be rotten.

"When I see a young preacher start out as a combination Savonarola, Peter the Hermit, Whitfield, Talmage, Dr. Wild, and Henry Ward Beecher, I see his finish in the weeds. Thur's a codlin' moth in him, an' sooner or later a old hen will come along and relieve him uv it.

"When I see a young feller buy a country paper and start in to make Puck, Judge, and Life look like thirty cents, I know it's only a case of codlin' moth.

"What becomes of all the Smart Alecks that get elected to the city, town, and township councils and school boards every year?

"Codlin' moth, Lucy—codlin' moth. Only one in a hundred makes good. The rest git ripe too sudden an' are sold to the vinegar factories.

"The codlin' moth has a particular spite agin our high schools an' colleges, the theological and medical schools in particular. Thousands uv them come out with brilliant records, but the codlin' moth has been at them, an' the first big storm shakes 'em down, an' they are culls—culls—culls!"

"Did the codlin' moth never bother you none?" queried Aunt Lucy.

He put his arm around her waist.

"Nothin' in that line ever bothered me but the kissin' bug."

CANADA'S EXHIBIT AT THE MILAN EXPOSITION

Canada's exhibit at the International Exposition at Milan has evidently made a great impression in Italy. Returned Canadians who have seen the Canadian pavilion give a most favorable report of it. It is said to have been one of the finest buildings of all those erected at the great fair, while the showing of the products of the Dominion was no less excellent.

In Italy, Canada was not very well known before the exposition. With many, it was but a name. Its commerce, its agriculture, its mineral wealth were unknown and the Italian was equally ignorant of Canada's undeveloped possibilities.

This ice of ignorance preventing Italian trade interest in Canada has been broken by the Dominion exhibit at the Milan exhibition. The Canadian pavilion was visited daily by thousands of Italians from all parts of Italy, and the size and beauty of the building, the variety and all round excellence of the exhibit created such an impression on the mind as will not soon wear off. The Italian Minister of Agriculture, who visited the Canadian pavilion, was very much impressed at the showing made by the Dominion, and expressed himself to that effect. The Italian farmers were particularly enthusiastic over the exhibit. They returned day after day to wander through the aisles gazing in admiration at the products of the young country across the seas. It is not unlikely Canada's showing at the exposition will result in the immigration of a great number of Italians of the farming class.

MILAN EXPOSITION—Canadian Pavilion.

The Canadian Pavilion.

The Canadian pavilion, which was built of sheet iron, was in itself very attractive. Its external appearance was excellent and did not at all belie the interior arrangements. No better compliment can be paid the Canadian building than the fact that some of the other countries exhibiting, whose buildings were burned by the fire which occurred shortly after the opening of the fair, modelled their new pavilions after the Canadian structure. Over the arched entrance to the building was a large maple leaf emblematic of Canada. This was a beautiful piece of workmanship. Inside everything was neatly and artistically arranged. The decorative scheme was carried out in Canadian grains. Every cereal was used, and, as may be seen by the accompanying illustration, the effect was exceedingly attractive. On the walls were hung pictures depicting harvesting and other incidents of farm life, views of the Canadian Rockies, and other scenes known to the inhabitants of Canada, but new and instructive to the Italians. Maple leaves were everywhere in evidence, being worked out in grain and other materials. On one wall was a large map of Canada showing the lakes, rivers, mountains and natural features. This was always a centre of interest to visitors. At all times the pavilion was well lighted, so that everything was shown to the best advantage.

The Exhibits.

The central portion of the building was occupied by the exhibit of minerals, agricultural implements and other such lines, while all around the sides were small arched rooms partitioned off from one another, which contained every product of the ground, and a great variety of manufactured goods. To be seen were samples of all the grains, fruits, vegetables, mineral waters, flours, biscuits, and other products of the Dominion. In a word, almost everything produced in the Dominion of Canada was on view. Explanatory signs were placed before each exhibit, while an abundance of descriptive literature was distributed daily. A noticeable feature in the Canadian pavilion was that the exhibits were arranged in natural rotation, thus flour followed wheat, biscuits flour, and so on

Three lines shown attracted particular attention. These were wheat, flour and apples. The quality of the wheat was pronounced by experts to be above anything imported by Italy at present. The apples on exhibition, which were of last year's growth, were thought to be remarkable. It was hard to convince visitors that the fruit was not artificial. They did not think it possible that such apples could be grown and kept for such a period.

The minerals also caused much comment. Canada is rich in ore of every description, and every metal produced in the Dominion was shown.

Taken all in all, Canada acquitted herself very creditably, and her exhibit, as compared with those made by other countries, was an excellent one.

Canada's Representatives.

The exhibit was made by the Canadian Government, there being no private interests. Mr. Hutchison, who had acted in like capacity for the Government before, was in charge, and he certainly is deserving of praise for his work. Others who worked in the interests of the Dominion were C. H. Catelli, president of the Montreal Chambre de Commerce, and C. Mariotti, the Italian consul at Montreal. Mr. Catelli acted as honorary commissioner of the Canadian Government.

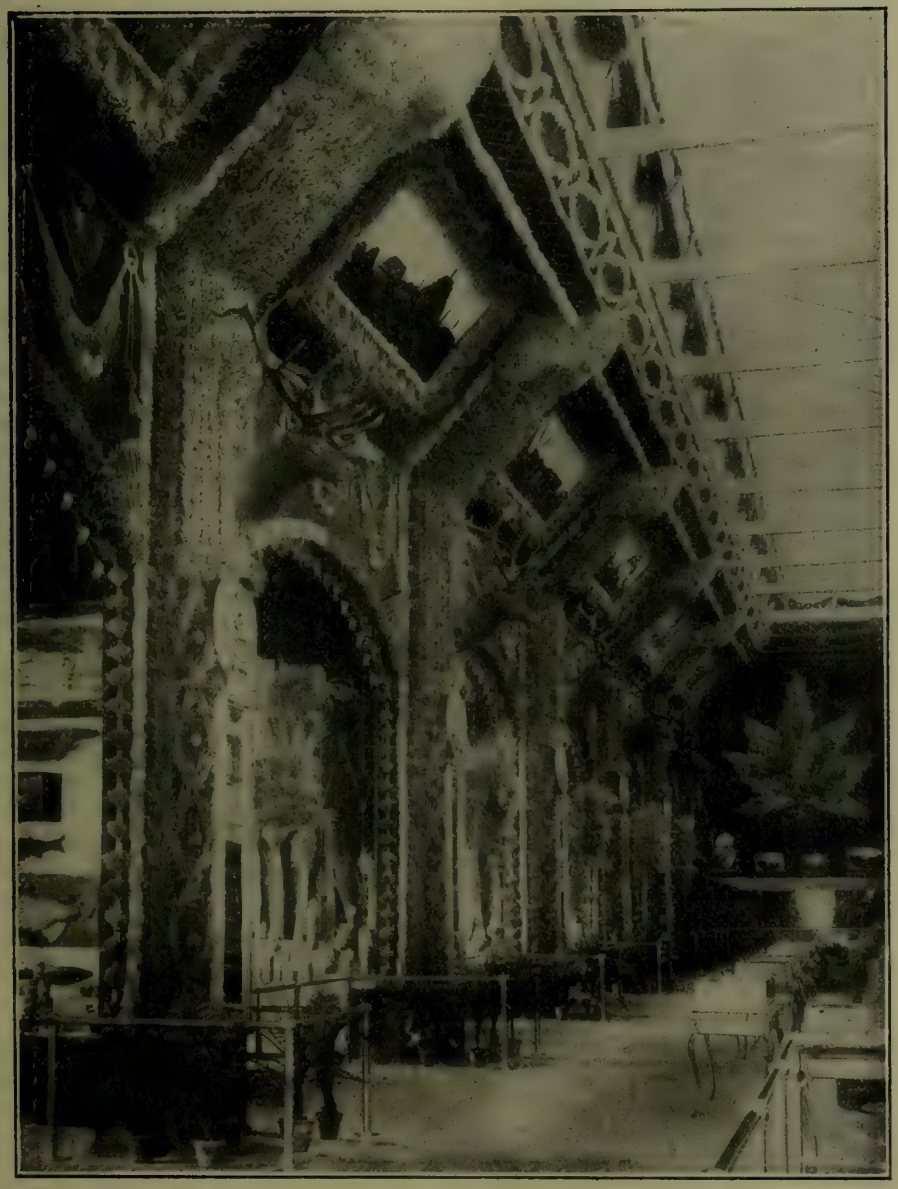
Prospects of Trade.

When seen on his return by a representative of The Canadian Grocer, Mr. Mariotti expressed himself as satisfied with the exhibit made by Canada. "We made a great showing," said he, "and without doubt there will be results. Already Italian business men are making inquiries with a view to establishing relations with Canada in a business way. Of course the great handicap to the development of trade relations between the two countries at present is the lack of direct communication. Had we a direct steamship connection, I have no doubt that the trade between the two countries would soon grow to large proportions. I believe that there is a certain large Italian steamship company which would be only too glad to run a monthly service between Canada and Italy if it were made any way profitable for them. But they must have the assistance of the two Governments. The two peoples must understand each other and this they do not at present. It would be necessary that there should be a revision of the tariff also. But the first thing is the direct steamship line. Let us get that and we shall have started. At present I believe there are only three or four direct steamers a year. But say we should have one direct steamer a month plying between Canada and Italy. We should soon have results which would be of mutual benefit. There are, as you know, many lines which could be exported profitably from Canada to Italy, and just as many lines which could be exported from Italy to Canada. We require lemons, oranges, marble, while Italy must have grain, apples, coal and other things. Why, the Canadian wheat would command a record price over in Italy, and there is no reason in the world why a large trade should not be built up between the two countries in this commodity alone. The Marquis Doria, representing the Italian Government, has done much to promote trade relations between the two countries. Let us have direct connection by water and the rest will come naturally.

"The exposition at Milan has done a great deal to establish Canada in Italian trade circles, and without doubt the country will derive great benefit from her excellent showing."



MILAN EXPOSITION—Partial View of Canada's Grain Exhibit.

SHE GOT THERE FIRST.

"I say, Gaddersby," said Mr. Smith, as he came into the fishmonger's with a lot of tackle in his hand, "I want you to give me some fish to take home with me. Put them up to look as if they've been caught to-day, will you ?"

"Certainly, sir," said the fishmonger. "How many ?"

"Oh, you'd better give me three or four barbel. Make it look decent in quantity without appearing to exaggerate, you know."

"Yes, sir. But you'd better take salmon, hadn't you ?"

"Why ? What makes you think so ?"

"Oh, nothing, except that your wife was down here early this afternoon and said if you dropped in with your fishing tackle and a generally woe-begone look, to get you to take salmon if possible, as she liked that kind better than any other."

Mr. Smith took salmon.—Punch.

FATTENED OYSTERS DANGEROUS

When oysters are removed from more saline water to that which is less salt, says Dr. William K. Brooks, professor of zoology in the Johns Hopkins University, who has made the oyster a life study, they absorb water quickly, and become plump, or "fat," but the fatness is nothing but water. The "fattening" is usually carried on in the mouths of rivers, which are always near towns and polluted by sewage.

Every "fattened" oyster is too suspicious to be eaten raw, and the outbreaks of typhoid fever which have been traced to oysters most clearly have been traced to "fattened" oysters. All the fresh water that a "fattened" oyster has absorbed is at once extracted by cooking, so that the "fattening" of oysters that are to be cooked is not only an unnecessary expense, but a fraud on the consumer, who is sold filthy water from the harbors of cities at the price of oysters.

COFFEE MAKING AND MARKETING

In a recent course of technical lectures before the Brighton (Eng.) branch of the National Association of Grocers' Assistants, J. Collings, a coffee expert and prominent in the Grocers' Federation, gave a very interesting talk on coffee. He drew attention to some interesting quotations from the earlier writers about coffee, and observed that public men, who had much speaking, found a cup of good coffee the gentlest and most effective of brain workers. Answering the question, What is coffee? he said that, unlike tea, which was the leaf of the plant, coffee was the actual fruit which, when ripe, was like a cherry in appearance, and under the outer or fruity covering there was a parchment which contained the seeds or berries.

There were usually two berries in each cherry, but sometimes only one, which, in that case, was oval in shape, and was described as "pea-berry." Whether one or two berries, it was this (when the outer coverings were removed) which had to be finally roasted and ground before being made into the beverage.

Tracing the history of the plant, which was originally derived from Kaffa in Abyssinia (hence its name), he spoke of its rapid cultivation over Arabia, Aden, Mecca, Medina, and thence to Syria and Persia, and went on to say that coffee was first introduced from the east into Europe in 1615, when it was taken into Italy, and France in 1660, coffee houses being opened in Paris in 1672, and something like £3,000 per year being spent by the household of Louis XIV. on this article alone. It was first introduced into England earlier than in France, the first coffee house in London being opened in 1655 in St. Michael's alley, Cornhill, and although at first it cost from £4 to £5 per lb., it soon became cheaper, coffee houses springing up everywhere. The lecturer quoted from an old advertisement in which it was claimed for coffee, among other things, that it "quickeneth the spirits and made the heart lightsome; was excellent to prevent and cure gout, dropsy, and scurvy; was known to be a better drink than any other for people in years; and was a most excellent remedy against the spleen and the like."

Although Arabia was at first the chief producing country, both plant and seeds were introduced into Java, India, Ceylon, the West Indies and Central and South America. At the present time only an infinitesimal proportion came from Arabia, three-fourths of the whole crop coming from the Brazils, viz., twelve million out of sixteen million bags, or equal to 720 thousand tons out of 960 thousand. Although a tropical plant, it flourished practically everywhere within a limit of 25 degrees, or at the outside 30 degrees, north or south of the Equator. Most of the coffee was grown from the Arabian variety but of late years a good deal of land had been planted with Liberian seed from West Africa, which produced bigger crops, was less liable to leaf disease, and produced berries of enormous size.

In London the coffee was at once put into the customs warehouses, samples were taken from each consignment and inspected by the trade, and on a given day an auction was held, the coffee sold, and so came into the hands of the distributors, whose business it was to continue the curing process by means of the application of intense uniform heat to the horny seed in order to make it yield its aroma and part with its non-food products, the latter chiefly water and gallic acid. The operation of roasting was of supreme importance; it demanded a great natural liking for coffee in the operator and continuous experience. The selection of seed coffee to make blends for use was important in its relation to local water supply wherein the coffee infusion was to be consumed.

Calling attention to the comparative consumption of coffee in various parts of the world, he pointed out that in the United States it was 1,000 million pounds per annum, or 12 lbs. per head; in the United Kingdom 30 million pounds for over 40 million people, or slightly under three-quarters of a pound per head—truly we had something to learn about this article; and in Holland, our pupil in coffee drinking, 16 lbs. per head. We had actually gone back from .090 in 1884 to .071 in 1903, and the reason was that coffee had not been intelligently handled in the past by the grocers of this country.

A series of interesting limelight views were thrown upon the screen, illustrating the planting, growing, flowering, fruiting and gathering, cleaning and drying, of the coffee, also methods of sorting and grading. Continuing, Mr. Collings described the characteristics to be looked for in testing and buying and points to be noted in selecting. He afterwards practically illustrated, in the following manner, the best way to make coffee, handing a cup to each person present: Use an earthenware jug, for exactness a pint jug for a pint of coffee beverage, a quart jug for a quart, etc.; make the jug dry hot; put into it for each pint not less than an ounce of genuine coffee; pour on fresh boiling water; stir thoroughly for two minutes; then fill the jug with water to the full extent of its capacity; let it brew for five minutes, and it is then ready for consumption.

COFFEE ADULTERANTS.

The United States leads the world in the consumption of coffee. The yearly consumption in Great Britain declined steadily during the last half of the nineteenth century. This is attributed to the adulterations which at one time were extensively practised. Probably few articles of food are subjected to so much adulteration as coffee. Substances of an entirely foreign nature are often palmed off as genuine coffee, or are offered as substitutes. Dandelion, parsnip, carrot, and beet roots, beans, lupins, rice, and various cereals, roasted and ground, have all been employed, and within recent years the manufacture of artificial coffee has been undertaken on a considerable scale, the material being mixed to a stiff paste and run through a machine for which patents have been granted, and from which it emerges in the shape of coffee beans, which, after drying and roasting, are well calculated to deceive the eye, though not the nostrils or palate. These adulterations can be readily detected, for genuine roasted coffee may be soaked in cold water indefinitely without the bean losing its smooth surface or hard, tough consistency, nor will it impart its color to the water, whereas chicory and other imitations become soft and spongy and render the water muddy. As far back as the eighties it was estimated that something like 18,000,000 pounds of various vegetable substances were annually sold as coffee.

GRADES OF COFFEE.

The difference in taste of coffee as found in the markets is principally due to two causes: (1) the roasting to either a reddish-brown or a dark brown; (2) the picking of coffee when some berries are green, others red, and still others a dark purple, the last being the ripe fruit. Thus we have three grades from each tree; add the difference in roasting, as mentioned, and we have six grades; then take the perfect berry, which is flattened on one side, and the spherical berry, the so-called Mocha, and that gives twelve grades of coffee

VENTILATION OF A MODERN GROCERY STORE

There is no class of tradesmen whose success to such a large extent depends upon the absolute cleanliness of their premises as the grocer and the butcher, and at the same time there are perhaps none who, at different periods of the year, experience greater difficulty in maintaining the desired sanitary conditions. In Summer time, as a rule, the question of ventilation is not a serious one, because the windows and doors are left open, and in consequence with reasonable precaution there is little danger of air pollution.

In Winter time, however, conditions are altered, and while there is not likely to be as much decomposition of animal and vegetable matter as during the Summer, still such decomposition is always taking place and will in a short time charge the air with the results, which are of both a gaseous and organic nature.

Even though the odors in a shop are not the result of decaying matter, but are simply—as in the case of a grocery store—the blending together of the butter, soap, onions, etc., they are sometimes offensive, and, everything else being equal, the store in which these combinations are reduced to a minimum will receive the greatest amount of and the most excellent patronage.

It is commonly supposed that, except with the use of an expensive mechanical plant, it is impossible to accomplish any definite results in the matter of ventilation, and for that reason few attempts have been made along that line.

Fire and Ventilation.

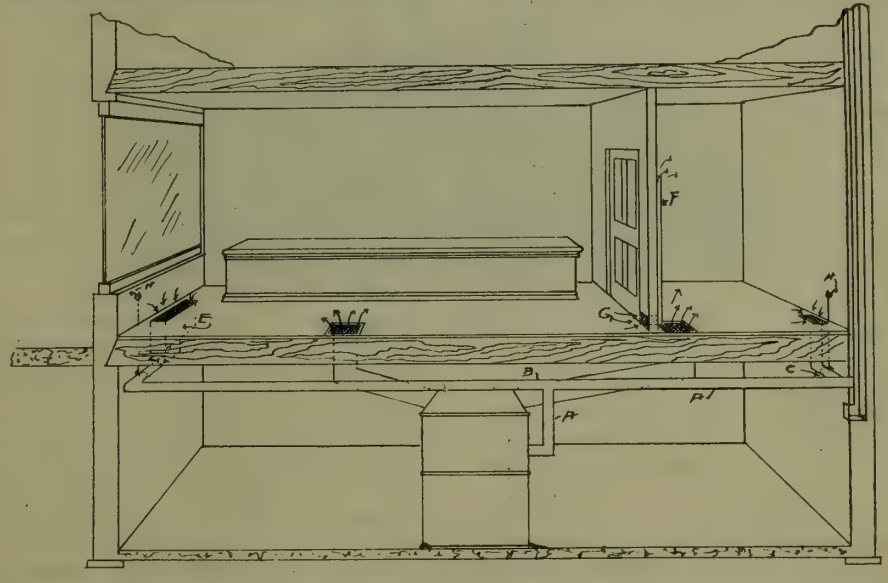
It is true that where a building or a room is filled with people who are constantly vitiating large volumes of air that no satisfactory results can be obtained except through the medium of a mechanical system which includes a fan, with the necessary motive power, but in the case of a store it is entirely another question, and in most cases very satisfactory results may be obtained by the expenditure of very little money and the exercise of a little common sense (which perhaps is not as common as it is supposed to be) and a good judgment.

Has it ever occurred to you that wherever there is a fire lit in a building there is a splendid means of providing a large amount of ventilation providing, as was said, good judgment is used and the proper appliances are provided?

Let us take, for example, the case of a store heated by a hot air furnace connected to a chimney 12 inches square and 35 feet high. Under such conditions with a very moderate fire the movement of gases in the chimney would average at least seven feet per second and would perhaps exceed that velocity considerably, depending upon local conditions. However, at the figure named the quantity of air or gas passing up the chimney every hour would be 25,200 cubic feet. Now, in most cases, where does that air come from? Most likely through badly fitting cellar windows and doors, perhaps broken panes of glass, and very seldom indeed from a place where it might be drawn with advantage to the storekeeper.

The Illustration.

The sketch shown is intended to indicate one way of the many in which this condition of affairs may be remedied and some definite results obtained in the matter of ventilation. It will be seen that the building consists of a front shop and a rear storeroom (though of course the idea would work out in the same way in any size building) and a basement. The furnace, which in this case is hot air, is placed as near the centre as possible, and a hot air register is placed in each room (the cold air inlet to the furnace, which may be taken from within the building or from outside, is not shown).



The smoke pipe (A A) connects with the chimney at the rear of the building. Into this smoke pipe are run two connections (E) and (C), both fitted with a tight damper from which chains (H H) are run up through the floor and fastened on hooks.

Now, ordinarily, there is a flap damper in a furnace smoke pipe, which when opened allows the chimney to draw the air directly from the cellar, instead of through the fire, thereby checking the latter. In this case such flap damper is omitted, and the openings to cellar made as tight as possible.

Moving Cold Air.

Assume now that the fire is in condition to check; instead of opening a flap damper in the cellar we would simply pull one or both of the chains marked (H), thereby opening the direct connections from the floor of the store above into the smoke pipe, and consequently into the chimney, and we at once set up a current from the coldest portion of the store, viz., the outside walls, which will remove cold foul air at the rate of perhaps 25,000 cubic feet per hour, which in most cases will provide ventilation sufficient to produce practically ideal conditions in a store.

It often happens that heat is neither required nor desired in the storeroom, while ventilation is most necessary. In such a case we would omit the hot air register indicated in the storeroom, and allow the cold air from the floor of the shop to pass in at (G) and up through pipe (F), and out through ventilating register in opposite side of the room.

It is desirable that the incoming air should be compelled to rise, for otherwise it might be drawn across the floor directly to the outlet without changing the air in the upper portion of the room at all.

Of course this system can be greatly modified to suit various circumstances. For instance, the space between two joists may be converted into a duct b nailing paper and boards across the bottom to make it tight and connecting same to smoke pipe at nearest point with a tin or galvanized iron sleeve.

Then again, a foul air pipe fitted with a tight damper may be taken from a cold spot in the shop and enter the under side of the ash pan so that all air passing through the coal or wood will be taken from some place where its removal will accomplish the most good.

The sketch, however, indicates a principle which the individual can, in most cases, work out to produce results at a very small cost.

FLOUR IN CHINA.

The Chinese cook stuck the end of an ivory chopstick into a small brown biscuit.

"Taste, sir," he said.

The biscuit was warm, crisp, rich ; it was light, well salted, nutritious — a biscuit, in a word, of peculiar excellence.

"This biscuit, sir, is made of flour of lentils," said the Chinaman. "You know lentils ? Little green pellets, slightly flattened like split peas. Lentils are considered the most nutritious of all the foods of the earth. This one lentil biscuit, sir, is equal in nourishing power to a pound and a half of roast beef."

He took from a tin a little cake.

"Again taste," he said.

The little cake was rich and good.

"It is made, sir, of the flour of almonds," said the cook—"fresh, sweet almonds, ground into a white powder between two millstones. Such a flour is a finer thing than your flour of wheat, eh ?"

Then he lifted a great lid and revealed some thirty or forty compartments, one filled with a pink flour, another with a yellow one, a third with a brown one, a fourth with a white, a fifth with a pale green, a sixth with a blue, and so on.

"All these are Chinese flours," he said. "In China, sir, we make over fifty kinds of flour. We make flour out of potatoes, out of sweet potatoes, out of peas, out of cocoanuts, out of millet, out of pulse, out of oats, out of bananas—the fact is, sir, we make flour in China out of everything but wheat, for in China, sir, we eat no bread, and therefore the coarse, dry, tasteless flour of wheat is useless to us."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

GINGER AND ITS PREPARATION

Pepper, cinnamon and ginger form the big trio in the galaxy of spices. Pepper is a fruit, cinnamon a bark and ginger a tuberous root or rhizome. When fresh and tender, ginger is preserved by removing the cortical and boiling it in syrup, says William N. Toshach in the Tea and Coffee Trade Journal. It is an agreeable, warm, wholesome sweetmeat, this prepared ginger, although somewhat neglected and awaiting a fancy name and an advertising expert.

The gingers from which the ground products of commerce are produced are the cured dried roots, cleaned, prepared and graded. There are five kinds, called respectively Jamaica, African, Cochin, Calcutta and Japan. Jamaica is by long odds the best in point of flavor and strength. There are those who have proved to their own satisfaction that African and Indian gingers are stronger than Jamaica's, and they present an analysis of the different sorts to establish their conclusions. Jamaica has a rare flavor and pungency, of which it contributes a considerable part to cold water and infusions. The fibre which is extracted in grinding makes an excellent extract and forms a splendid matrass to mix with gingers ground too fine for percolation. It is excellent for ginger-ale makers, although many grinders now consider this fibre worthless and throw it away. The pieces of ginger root vary in lengths from two to six inches, with a number of irregular branches, reminding one of miniature deer antlers. They are yellowish white on the outer surface ; the inner portion is nearly white. Coated with whiting, this root becomes the bleached ginger of commerce, and although its price is as high at times as 4 cents per pound above the price of the natural root, its spice value has been depreciated, as chalk and water would reduce the value of milk. The dope is prepared by mixing three-eighths of a pound of glue and two ounces of borax in two gallons of water, which, when thoroughly dissolved, is added with seven pounds whiting to sufficient boiling water to make, in all, 24 gallons, which while hot should serve to bleach (whitewash) a ton of ginger, if it is properly dipped and distributed, and afterward well spread out and sun dried. It is superior to a number of wonderful decoctions, a few of which would seem to represent disinfectants and coatings for matches.

African ginger has a flavor which entitles it to a place near the head ; it is darker than Jamaica, the pieces are distinctly rougher and thicker, and flattened on the upper and lower surface. It communicates a deep color to an extract of Jamaica ginger when added in proportions of 25 per cent., but the color is a decided objection to its ground product. All the gingers except Jamaica are packed in unbleached bags of 100 to 150 pounds. Tare 2 per cent. Cochin ginger is graded by letters, A being the highest and D the lowest. Very little A reaches our market ; London, Havre and Hamburg skim the best selections off the ginger crop.

An assortment is shipped to our markets called "A B C," which purports to be a mixture of the three, but it is frequently but C. The better grades are nearly the same in color as Jamaica, but the branches are thicker and obtuse, while the lower grades, especially when the crop is poor, are short, horny and wrinkled.

Cochin serves also to lighten the darker sorts ; while not very valuable outside of its color for a ground product of itself, as it is neither a good baker or extract maker, it has a place in many blends. This is sometimes bleached in the same manner as Jamaica.

Calcutta follows Cochin and is a dark root. The price secures it recognition. 'Tis usually dirty, has a rough epidermis which is well wrinkled. It was used largely as a salve for the conscience of those who sophisticated their product with a mixture of

250 lbs. corn meal
250 lbs. wheat flour
5 lbs. cayenne

which was colored and incorporated with five pounds ginger fibre or cut rope. In the "good old, glad old golden days" fibre was an evidence of purity in ginger and there was not always enough to purify it ; therefore, secondhand rope was substituted. It is commonly reported that South street junk dealers were ashamed to look ginger-bread in the face.

Ginger being composed so largely of starch mixes readily with flour and rice polish, and kindly nature, not to be outdone, has provided that gingers shall be a fair haven and most prolific breeding ground for worms. Japan ginger is still cheaper, but lighter in color and has less pungency.

ST. HYACINTHE'S DAIRY SCHOOL

On every side are visible signs of the progress being made by Canada along agricultural lines. The latest indication of growth in this direction is the erection of a new dairy school at St. Hyacinthe.

The new school is a provincial institution, having been erected by the Quebec Government. It therefore concerns chiefly those residing in the Province of Quebec, and illustrates the development of the cheese and butter trade in that province more than other parts of Canada. The school was erected to replace the old one, which had become antiquated, and quite incapable of giving satisfaction in these days of progress. It was largely with the end in view of helping the Dairymen's Association and the exporters that it was finally decided to build a new school.

Praise for the Institutions.

Everyone who has seen the new school has a word of praise for it. It is probably the best equipped institution of its kind in America, every modern convenience for use in the manufacture of butter and cheese being installed. Everything has been done which would tend to aid the students. There is accommodation for eighty pupils, and the school should soon be taxed to its capacity.

The principal building, which is three storeys high, with a basement, is 50 by 100 feet. The upper floors are twelve feet in height, while it is ten feet from floor to ceiling in the basement. To the left of this building is a cheese factory 84x40 feet, while to the right there is a creamery of the same size. It will be seen that these buildings are quite separated from one another, so that there can be no contamination from one to the other.

The Cheese Factory.

In the cheese factory are to be found all the latest devices for use in the manufacture of cheese. There is a ripening room which is divided into three compartments. There is also an ice house. It is possible to maintain different temperatures in the different compartments, because the latest ideas in the circulation of air from the ice house or simply from the atmosphere outside, for the purpose of cooling, are used. The floor of the factory is of cement, and there is a gradual slope to the mouth of the drain at the centre, making it possible to wash the floor at will with ease.

The walls are of painted brick, while the ceiling is of stamped and painted sheet iron. There is accommodation for eighty pupils along the right front wall. Along the left front wall are the machines, while there is a large open space between the machines and the pupils' benches, where may stand the teacher when demonstrating the different processes in the manufacture of cheese.

The Creamery.

Except that there is a cold room, a storeroom, a washroom, and no ripening room, the creamery is just the same as the cheese factory.

In the Main Building.

Situated on the first floor of the main building are the reading and waiting rooms of the pupils, and also a small study. Here also are the offices of the managers of the school, and a dressing room and toilet room for the professors. A five-foot passageway runs along the centre parallel with the front of the building. This passage connects with the cheese factory on the left, and the creamery on the right. The pupils' laboratory is between the apartments of the butter instructor and his assistants, and those of the cheese instructor and his assistants. The laboratory contains two large sinks, and two steam babcocks, one being for cream and the other for milk. Then there are work tables for the pupils. The tables are covered with lead. All necessary instruments are supplied. The laboratories of the provincial chemist are to be found on the next floor. There are three of them, while on the third floor there are three more, one of them being fitted up for photography. The director of the school has rooms on the second floor. The basement contains, besides the living rooms where the pupils pass their spare time, a good-sized vestibule with a staircase leading to the first floor, and also a recreation room and lavatories.

In the basement at the creamery end of the building there are two laboratories where may be studied chemistry and bacteriology. There are also two such laboratories on the cheese side, in the basement. There are two more rooms in the basement of the cheese department, one for the making of soft cheese and the other for ripening.

There is hot and cold water, gas, electricity, and everything up-to-date.

The Provincial Government is to be commended for giving, in such a substantial manner, encouragement to the making of cheese and butter. The new school is sure to be well patronized, and in a few years there cannot help but be a noticeable improvement in the quality of the already excellent cheese and butter turned out by makers in the Province of Quebec.

The New Dairy School, St. Hyacinthe.

GREEN TURTLES.

The flesh of the green turtle, it is claimed, brings up to $50 a pound, and the meat comes from the coral reefs of the West Indies. The turtles are caught in nets among the rocks. They are carefully shipped north. It's a different treatment that they get, though, at the natives' hands. If a native is bringing turtles north he nails them fast to the deck by their flippers. Strange creatures that they are, they appear to suffer little under such cruel treatment. The calipee and calipash are respectively the flesh from the breast and the back of the green turtle, tit-bits which are unequalled in the earth beneath, the heavens above, or the waters under the earth. This meat is superlatively rich, delicate and tender. Live green turtles fetch wholesale from a dime to a quarter a pound. What makes the meat so expensive in the end is that out of a 140-lb. fish you'll only get two pounds of calipee and one of calipash. Several times when there has been a tight turtle market the chefs offered $1 a pound for live turtles.

WHAT IS THE COST OF DOING A RETAIL BUSINESS?

Subject for an Open Discussion

Only four or five in a hundred of the people who go into business succeed. The other ninety-five or six either go to the wall or eke out a bare existence.

"Ninety per cent. of retailers," said a business man the other day, "don't know the cost of doing business. It's the cause of so many failures and in my opinion the best training for a business career is a thorough course in bookkeeping and accounting."

If this be true, and the view is strongly held by a great many business men, it is time the retail grocers and general merchants of Canada were making a thorough study of the cost of doing business. The old school definition that profit is the difference between the cost price and selling price of an article is wrong. The expense of doing business must be substracted from the profit and the grocery trade affords a great many instances of when that can't be done, for the reason that if a boy has only two cents three can't be taken from him.

Two Causes of Failure.

There are two reasons for this lack of knowledge of the cost of doing business. The first is bad or inefficient methods of bookkeeping. The second is a failure to include in the cost of doing business all the items of expenditure that go to make it. There may be some difference of opinion in this regard affording subject matter for discussion. As an introduction to the question a representative of The Canadian Grocer interviewed a gentleman prominent in the wholesale grocery trade who has given a great deal of consideration to this aspect of trade inquiry.

What Should be Counted.

The first item he mentioned was interest on the capital invested. Supposing a man were working on borrowed capital he would pay interest. If a storekeeper borrowed half his capital, the interest on his own money would be as legitimate an item of expense as the interest on what he had borrowed. This should include also interest on the value of stock not paid for. It should include also interest on all outstanding accounts owing him. If a firm has $1,000 or $25,000 open accounts on their books the interest on that is assuredly a legitimate cost of doing business.

Then there are some items that leave no room for questioning—rent, taxes, light, fuel, wages, advertising, insurance. If a storekeeper owns his premises he should include rent, or what is the same thing, interest on the value of the property.

Some Not so Clear.

Other less obvious but no less actual items of cost are salary of the proprietor, depreciation of stock and plant, loss of goods in weighing out, loss by bad debts, repairs and renewals, delivery.

If a storekeeper employed a manager the business would have to pay the manager's salary. If a man manages his own business he should have a salary just the same. It is what he lives on, his livelihood. Some people might say "His profits are his salary." Not at all. That is putting him in a worse position than the hired manager. If a business failed the worst that could befall a hired manager would be the loss of a position. He risks nothing. The storekeeper risks all he puts into his business. Surely his profits cannot be regarded as his salary. Profits should, as a matter of fact, be something quite distinct, something over and above salary.

Depreciation.

Depreciation of stock and plant is not a myth. Take fruit, for instance, just as an example. Every bit of it that goes bad on a grocer's hands should be kept count of as stock depreciation. The same rule applies to all other commodities. Scales wear out, horses get old.

The loss of goods in weighing is a case of "many a mickle makes a muckle." It is a very natural tendency in salesmen to appear liberal and the effort to fight against it is not likely to be so strong if one is dealing with someone else's goods. Some people will rashly assert that what is given away in over-weight wouldn't amount to a hill of beans in a year. It is a great mistake to think so. Suppose that on an average a man gave over-weight of an ounce every time he sold a pound. Many sales would be more than one pound, many would be less. In a business of $32,000 he would be giving away $2,000. The best cure for over-weight is to have goods weighed up in advance wherever possible.

No one will dispute bad debts as a legitimate item in the cost-of-doing-business account, but some may not have the courage to make a clean breast of it and admit the loss.

Things Wear Out.

Repairs and renewals may look like a repetition of depreciation. In regard to plant it might be, in a sense. The point is provision must be made for both repairs and renewals. Repairs are continually necessary. Every person utilizing any kind of plant should know the percentage of depreciation and provide for it. If a horse lasts five years, in one year a fifth of his value is used up, has gone into the cost of doing business.

Cost of Delivery.

The cost of delivery would surprise some merchants if they would give it careful consideration. Here is how a retail grocer in an Ontario city doing a business of $125,000 a year figures it out. He keeps eight delivery wagons :

Interest on investment, 6 p.c. :
Barn	$1,300
Rigs	1,000
Horses	1,200
	$3,500	$ 210
Wages of drivers		4,000
Keep of horses		1,162
Taxes on stable		33
Repairs		400
Total		$5,805

This is just a little over 5 per cent. on the turn-over and shows that it costs this grocer $725 a year to keep one delivery wagon. It will cost the man who keeps only one more.

A Wholesaler's Comment.

Commenting on the situation generally the wholesaler referred to above said :

"In the first place a man in business is not in business for fun, or for a mere living. He should accumulate a certain sum each year to the good that would keep him from want by the time he is 55 or 60 at any rate.

"The temptation to cut prices is the curse of the whole business and it is ignorance that is at the root of all cutting, the lack of knowledge of the cost of doing business. It is the principal reason for failures. The result of cutting is that a man's family suffers. He is not able to give them a proper education. He is not able to take the recreation due himself.

A Hard Worker.

"There is no man works harder than the retail grocer ; he is up early and to bed late ; he seldom takes a holiday ; he is grinding all the time. Quite a number of the retail grocers and general merchants throughout the country never could make ends meet if it was not for a family combination. They get in their sons and daughters and don't half pay them. If the time of all those engaged in the retail trade was paid for in proportion to its value and the work done, half the stores would fail. The proportion of those who succeed in the grocery business is very, very small, probably not over five per cent. It doesn't necessarily follow that all the others fail ; they simply exist, go to the wall or out of business."

Schedule for Statement.

This gentleman places the cost of doing a retail business at 22 per cent. of the total turn-over. Many men will not agree with him. The Grocer invites its subscribers to fill in the accompanying schedule and forward it to the editor. The name will not be made public unless permission is given.

Some Retailers' Views.

With a view to taking up this question The Canadian Grocer requested the views of several leading grocers as a beginning to the discussion, and the following have been received :

Young Men Should Aim High.

An Ontario general merchant signing himself "Ruben" writes :

What can or cannot be considered as a proper charge on profit is often asked.

We contend that the cost of doing business has a prospective and retrospective side, and can be considered as a theory or a fact.

To the young man about to start in business the prospective cost must appeal. To him it is a hazy dream ; after years of business it often becomes an awful nightmare.

We will, then, consider the cost of doing business from the standpoint of an investor. What must the young man consider as a legitimate basis of considering cost ? All men enter business life for one reason — that of making money. Capital, time, energy, are devoted to that end, and the margin between cost price and price realized (commonly called by the misnomer "profit"—frequently a loss) must carry the business ship to the harbor of success or leave it a derelect upon the sea, a menace to the trade of those who navigate the same waters, dangerous to other interests limited only in proportion to its size, the practical result of not being able to discern between profit and loss. Stocks may differ—as may communities—but when a man draws say $5,000 from the bank and invests it in stock he must be in a position at the end of a period of time to withdraw that amount plus a profit above interest or he has not succeeded.

To the beginner we say, over-estimate rather than under-rate the cost of doing business. It's safer. You invest say $5,000 cash in a stock of general merchandise. You estimate you can do $15,000 worth of business on this investment (we believe that the average stock in Ontario is not turned over more than twice, however). In order to do this you will have to charge against profit : Salaries (other than your own), rent of store, light, heat, taxes, insurance, advertising, freight, cartage, express, office expenses, depreciation of value of stock, and if you are doing a credit business, depreciation of value of book accounts also. We submit the following and contend that a man who hopes to succeed is not safe to alter the estimate only as time and experience together with the yearly balance sheet prove his ability to do so.

A Concrete Example.

To do a $15,000 business on a $5,000 stock of general merchandise we estimate the cost as follows :

	Per year.
Rent of building	$200.00
Salaries—
Man	500.00
Girl	250.00
Boy	200.00
Insurance on $5,000 at 1¾	88.00
Light and heat	100.00
Advertising, 1 p.c. on amount of business	150.00
Taxes	50.00
Freight, cartage and express	300.00
Office expenses	100.00
Interest on investment, 6 p.c. on $5,000	300.00
Ten per cent. on $2,000, cost of collecting book accounts, together with bad debts marked off	200.00
Add to this the depreciation in the value of his stock, worth say 80c. after one year	1,000.00
Total	$3,438.00

We have $3,438 as the estimated amount of the legitimate cost of doing this amount of business. In many items our figures are too conservative, and you will notice we have not taken into consideration the salary of the proprietor, this because we consider the above table as fixed expenditure, a tax against the business which must be met, while the proprietor's salary may be decreased or increased as business may warrant. The man who goes into business for one year, then sells out, may consider himself most lucky if he can do so without an actual loss, while the man who remains in business would not have to consider depreciation of stock more than from 5 p.c. to 10 p.c. per annum, save only the year he should wind up his business, when after five years his stock would perhaps be worth 75 per cent.

It will then be clearly seen that under ordinary circumstances a man must average 33 1-3 per cent. advance on net cost (not 1-3 advance on invoice, as much could be said about the importance of the cash discount and its place in a business man's success). But following up our example, 33 1-3 advance on cost would mean a gross profit of $3,750, or a salary for the proprietor, providing he remains in business, of roughly $1,000.

If every business man felt that departure from the above, whether business extravagance or cutting of prices, etc., meant a cutting of his salary (the only item of cost not fixed) fewer business failures would have to be reported.

From the Pacific Coast.

A firm of grocers write from Vancouver, B.C. :

Our experience has shown us that our expense, or the cost of doing business, is one of the items that require careful consideration. We have been told that 10 per cent. should cover the cost of handling our business, but we find that such is not the case. We place our expenses in schedule form as follows : Rent, or interest on capital in building, 2 per cent. ; delivery of goods, 2½ per cent. ; clerks' wages, 5 per cent. ; bad accounts, ½ per cent. ; interest on value of stock and fixtures, ½ per cent. ; light, fuel, insurance and repairs, ½ per cent. ; total, 11 per cent.

This we consider to be a very conservative estimate, and we can safely say that while expenses have varied according to circumstances, the volume of trade and the competition, these figures may be taken as a basis of a medium or small store's expenses.

Another Schedule.

"Success," writing from Carleton Place, Ont., says :

I think the following should be considered in arriving at the cost of doing business :

At least bank interest on capital invested.

Rent or interest on value of real estate.

Reasonable salary to proprietor.

Wages to employes.

Insurance.

Taxes.

Horse keep, repairing rigs, etc.

Light and heat.

Telephone.

Depreciation in value of fixtures.

Postage, stationery, and all other expenses incidental to the business.

To illustrate : Suppose a man is doing $12,000 business per year with $3,000 invested, I would figure cost something like this :

Interest on capital, 3½ p.c.	$105.00
Rent	200.00
Salary to proprietor	800.00
Wages to employes	850.00
Insurance	50.00
Taxes	30.00
Horse keep, repairing rigs, etc.	75.00
Light and heat	50.00
Telephone	20.00
Depreciation in value of fixtures	25.00
Postage, etc.	25.00
	$2,230.00
Now suppose he figured 20 per cent. profit on selling price of goods, $12,000, we have	2,400.00
Less	2,230.00
Net profit	$170.00

I do not include freight as I think freight is a part of cost of goods and should not be figured in cost of selling them. In addition to the above I would add a small percentage for waste goods in some businesses where such waste is unavoidable. It seems to me too many merchants act on the principle that to buy an article for 80c. and sell it for $1 means 20c. profit, and to my mind at least we need just such a discussion as you are undertaking.

How Another Does It.

A grocer in an Ontario city writes :

In reply to your inquiry re cost of doing business, I will give you my own method. We derive our cost of doing business by keeping an account of our total sales each day and month, also our total expenses (including interest on capital, proprietor's salary and adding 1 per cent. for bad accounts). Multiply the total expenses by 100, then divide it by the total sales, adding your 1 per cent. for bad accounts, and you have the per cent. of cost of doing business. For example, I will give you our method of keeping account of our daily sales and expenses and figuring our per cent. of cost at the end of each month :

Total business for month	$4,000.00
Total expenses	400.00
Per cent. to cover expenses	10 p.c.
Bad accounts	1 p.c.
Cost of doing business for month of June, 1906	11 p.c.

June, 1906.

Sales—
Cash	$2,000.00
Credit	2,000.00	$4,000.00
Expenses—
Wages	$240.00
Freight, etc.	10.00
Rent	40.00
Paper and twine	20.00
Fuel and light	8.00
Stable	25.00
Interest and insurance	35.00
General	22.00	$400.00

EAT CODFISH AND SQUID.

Wood's Hole, Mass., is a place where biologists from all the leading universities of America study during the Summer, says the New York Times. The Government maintains a station here and provides all material free for experimental purposes. Prof. Field is in charge and he occasionally entertains his pedagogical friends at an experimental marine dinner. Among his guests recently were Dr. Mathews, of Chicago ; Dr. Conklin, of Pennsylvania ; Dr. Carpenter, of Texas, and Dr. Crampton, of Columbia University. All pronounced the work of Professor Field a success. The majority voted that the dinner was a fine one.

Prof. Irving A. Field, who is a fellow of Harvard College and professor of chemistry at the College of Western Maryland, said among other things : "A sea food must pass these standards : Palatability, digestibility, be nutritious and abundant. It should come from deep cold water rather than warm, shallow water. The animal should feed on other living animals or on vegetable matter. The following pass muster under this test : The snail (littorina), the squid, the whelk (sycotypus), the rock crab, the sand lance and dogfish. The snail is abundant along the Atlantic coast as far south as Long Island. Boil it in salt water for fifteen minutes. Use a pin or needle to extract it from its shell. The squid is clean, and is found all along the coast. It is to be had for 10 cents per bucket, and may be fried or pickled in vinegar and spices. The whelk (large snail) makes a chowder equal to that of any clam. It may also be fried and is plentiful. The sand lance, or silver side, is better than any sardine if steamed under pressure and then preserved in olive oil. The dogfish may be prepared like any other fish."

Through Professor Field's experiments this fish is now being put up in cans like salmon. It tastes like sea bass. All the fish mentioned by Professor Field were served at his dinner. Professor Field says a cheap food is needed for wage earners, as statistics show that one-half of the wage earner's income goes for food.

QUEBEC EXPANSION.

Conditions in the flour and feed section of Quebec City trade are more satisfactory than some little time ago, due to more than average crops, assured prosperity and general optimistic feelings resulting from the calls in Quebec of C.P.R. steamers and the building of the new bridge. This is evidenced in no better way than the decided expansion in the trade of many firms. None can show a more striking growth than that of C. A. Paradis, which house although but two years established under his own name has already won an assured position.

Although young in years, Mr. Paradis has had ten years' experience in the trade and has built up a splendid connection as a result of strict integrity in all dealings coupled with exceptional facilities and a great deal of earnest hard work. In fact, he goes so far as to make his business his pleasure, supervising all departments, though by no means a "do-it-all man."

A Grocer representative was recently shown through his premises, taking note of his large warehouses for flour, feed, grain, hay, provisions, fish of all kinds and general groceries. His business is at 81 Dalhousie street. Immediately back of commodious offices is a brick warehouse 160 by 40 feet, amply stored in all its large five flats and basement. This is said to be the largest warehouse in the city. Beside this is another warehouse 40 by 60 with four flats.

These few facts give his retail customers an inkling of his ability to promptly look after their wants and afford manufacturers and millers some idea of the value of his representation. These large warehouses enable him to give ample accommodation to firms wishing storage facilities and his business in this direction is increasing.

Mr. Paradis is planning to extend his business so as to effectively handle foreign and domestic agencies in grocery and allied lines. His experience presages success. He is now open to receive applications from firms wishing up-to-date representation.

PLEA FOR PACKAGE GROCERIES

Modern Trade Development

(R. C. Brandon, in Interstate Grocer.)

The grocery business is in a state of evolution, and has been for some time. The tin can, glass jar, paste-board carton, bag, box and oiled paper are the overturning influences acting upon methods and conditions bearing upon the old-time grocery trade. The customer at retail wants his goods delivered to him in a package. The manufacturer and jobber in "straight" goods encourage the idea. The retail grocer finds a simplified business, a cleaner, surer profit, and the minimum of time and labor in dispensing these package goods to his customers. It is the age of the illustrated, printed package in the grocery business, and, with the introduction of one package to a new line of commodity, the grocer feels the pressure of demand for packages for half a dozen other lines that have not been adapted to box, jar or carton.

Seriously, as well as in the comic papers, prunes always have been associated with the grocery store. Fifteen years ago, when a grocer in a big city bought his prunes, he got them in a tremendous packing case weighing many hundred pounds, and stamped with the hieroglyphics of the Turkish growers and customs ports. With the coming of the American prune and raisin the handy packing box is coming, assuring to the customer cleanliness, freedom from insect ravages, and the undeteriorated flavor of the fruit.

Sanitary Era in Groceries.

Without doubt cleanliness and sanitation have been the greatest forces leading to this evolution of the package grocery store. The consumer, with his knowledge of germs and their menace, his disposition to fear adulterants, and always his repugnance against the unnecessary handling of the things he has to eat, caused him to lead, rather than follow, the idea of the package, with the name of the packer stamped upon the outer covering. This acknowledged source of a packed commodity carried an assurance with it which no grocer's parcel in brown paper ever had given the customer. Then, in the same measure, this same package relieved the dispensing grocer of the authority for its excellence. With only these things in favor of the package the evolution of the grocery business was made plain.

But in a hundred other ways the old-time grocer, looking on at the package business in the modern grocery store, may see where his old methods were more than archaic by comparison.

Freed from the Errors of Clerks.

The grocer selling in packages, first of all, has an absolute assurance against the inaccuracies of the average clerk who handles weights and measures. This clerk is not a scholarly, systematic man. He may be hurried beyond measure. He may be tired out late in a long day. If he makes a mistake on the scales and gives out too much he cheats the house of profits; if he weighs too little he is almost as likely to antagonize the customer and lose the trade for his house. At the best, and at all times, the customer, looking on, expects to see the scale register the proverbial "down weight," and this may mean one penny-weight or two ounces—all dependent upon the clerk or upon the clerk's mood and attention.

Thus in weighing alone the proprietor of a grocery store dealing along the lines of case goods never was certain that even the law of averages would keep him on the right side of reasonable profit. Then eleven eggs in a bag which should have held a dozen; a pound of crackers, full weight, but with half of the squares broken and dog-eared; a parcel improperly wrapped, which on the way to a customer would burst open, spilling half the contents—these conditions in the business of the old-time grocer left him especially open to the suggestion of the package trade.

Difficulty in Price Making.

On the other side of his business, too, the old-timer had many guesses coming. For instance, he bought a barrel of cucumber pickles. The manufacturer who sold it to him probably said there were 1,000 pickles in the barrel. Not unlikely it contained 800, with eight inches of salt sediment in the bottom. How could the grocer, paying for 1,000 cucumbers and doubting the number, fix his own retail price to his own customer in any certainty except by counting them?

How could this same grocer, buying a thirty-pound box of soda crackers, fix readily his retail price when he had to consider the problems of down weights, the breaking of the crackers, the deteriorations and losses that came of the goods lying around in the open boxes, subject to moisture, dirt and the petty inroads of the cheese and cracker fiend?

Heavy Loss on Bulk Goods.

Considering the old-time grocery store, it might be said that three-fourths of all the goods he handled in bulk were subject to a legitimate loss in weight, and to this extent a deterioration in quality and flavor. But this illegitimate loss that came first through a short count from the jobber and later through the petty shoplifting of the loafing, inquiring, but non-purchasing "customer," was a terror to the average small grocer. These losses made his business as much a guess as the package trade makes it a certainty.

It may be set down as certain that if ever the package grocery ceases for any reason to exist it will be against the strenuous, hard fighting of the package grocery keeper. When package groceries have evolved to include every line handled by the grocer—if that shall be possible—the package grocer will have the simplest, surest business in the world. It will be possible then for him to make an almost absolute statement of his condition of business every night in the week. How shall this be possible?

In the first place, he will know almost at a glance what his sales for the day have been. He will know that neither more nor less has been handed out to a customer than the package paid for has guaranteed. He will have got the packed commodity at a certain fixed price, and it will have been sold at the fixed retail figure beyond any reasonable chance of mistake. And with all this in favor of the packed commodity, the whole business of receiving the goods into the house, the displaying of it, the handling of it to the delivery wagon, and the final dumping of it on the kitchen table of the customer will have saved the grocer at least one-third of the time of his working forces.

Chance for Progressive Grocer.

Under the present conditions of the grocery trade there is opportunity for the wide-awake, active grocer to anticipate some of the coming certainties in package development. He may have a certain bulk goods which he knows are up to his standard of quality. He is assured that his customers will be glad to have the commodity in a staple package, if even he have to put his own name and address upon the wrapper in identification. For instance, bulk prunes of good quality may be bought for 8 cents a pound, net. If they are packed at once in a proper carton in a proper way they can be handled satisfactorily by a careful man and without loss. Thus a pound of 8 cent prunes in a carton will cost the grocer 9 cents, while the package may be sold to the consumer for 14 cents, giving a clean, sure profit of 5 cents on every package handled.

Naturally as the neatness and general appearance of a grocery package mean much in the sale of its contents, the general tendency of the package commodity will be to enforce tidiness and display of goods to every advantage on the part of the grocer. Goods that a few years ago were in boxes, barrels and bales which served to litter up the best kept store now are placed on shelves down the side of a storeroom and in the front windows, dressing the room attractively and at the same time doing as much as the salesman can do in suggesting purchases for the consumer who has his eyes about him.

Name Must Carry Guarantee.

Package goods carrying the name of the producer or jobber or retailer are the goods par excellence of the present and of the future. The guarantee of the packer must go with every package. This is an implied condition which the customer will insist upon. A man may go to John Smith's grocery store and buy a commodity from a bulk case, taking it home to find it distinctly second class. Yet he may use this commodity to the end out, of its common brown bag, unmarked, while if the stuff had been in a cardboard carton bearing the name of John Smith the goods would have been returned with indignant protest.

It is in handling package goods that the grocer finds his protection against the operation of the food laws. Goods coming in an original package from the manufacturer or his agents and sold in that package by the retail grocer leaves the grocer free of legal entanglements if the goods shall have been adulterated. If goods are bought in bulk and weighed and sold by the grocer at retail the customer finding short weight or adulteration has recourse against the grocer.

Spice Trade Proves Point.

No plainer showing of the responsibility of the firms packing groceries can be shown than has been marked in the spice trade in the last fifteen years. In 1890 at least 65 per cent. of all spices were sold in bulk, much of it was ground, and even more of it adulterated. To-day, virtually all spices are in packages, ground, and in the grinding and packing and labelling of these spices the public has its chief assurance that it is getting the best that the markets afford. Few people to-day would buy ground spices from a bulk can, and nobody who buys his whole spices with the intent to grind them himself can feel that he is getting any better commodity than is served in packages by a responsible manufacturer of spices who expects to remain successfully in business.

Packages Come to Stay.

Package groceries have come to stay. Cleanliness, sanitary precaution, and celerity in the retail business will insist upon the retention of the package. And because of this demand for package groceries the producer and jobbers are to be held to the chalk line of honest weights, values and flavors.

Burglars broke into the store of Hibbard & Son, Ridgeway, Ont., some weeks ago, blew open the post office safe and got away with $60 cash and $194 in stamps. They then appropriated a horse and rig and got across the Niagara River. Nothing more has been heard of them. The Government takes the loss as the stuff was securely locked away.

STORE MAKING AND STORE METHODS

A. R. Denison is a prosperous and popular architect in Toronto. In conversation with a representative of The Canadian Grocer he outlined his idea of what the interior of a grocery store ought to be. Mr. Denison has visited many of the largest cities of America and has carefully observed store construction and arrangement. His views may not appeal to some practical grocers, but as a specialist his views cannot fail to interest everyone associated with the grocery business. He said :

My idea of an ideal family grocery, just say a good family grocery, is this : The entrance should not be more than six inches above the sidewalk level. The windows should be very wide and of clear plate glass without obstructions for about eight feet from the floor and above that to the ceiling should be light reflecting glass that will throw light into the store. The show windows should be dust-tight to preserve goods placed in them. The floor of the show window should be of glass or tiles. There should be as little wood as possible used in the construction of the shop front or inside show window. The entrance-way to the store should be tiled. The store floor should be either of hard wood polished or of tiles. The walls and ceilings should be finished in hard cement and painted or faced with glass tiling. The counters should be of metal with a plate glass top.

Breaking Away from Usage.

Here's where I would make a departure from the ordinary grocery as we know them in Canada. I would divide the store into two compartments by a glass and iron partition. The front portion would be the public or salesroom. The rear portion would be a stock room where as much as possible goods would be kept in their original packages, and a work room for the putting up of orders.

The front apartment, the sample or selling room, I should furnish with metal-and-glass silent salesmen cases and little or no shelving would be placed upon the walls. As regards shelving, there may be room for a difference of opinion, and if it were decided to have any it would be also of metal and glass, glass shelves on metal brackets.

Stock Room Fittings.

The bulk goods department should be fitted with dust-proof bins and metal shelving. As much light as possible should be allowed to enter from the rear. For this purpose there should be large fanlights and windows opening into the yard and should be fitted with fine copper wire screens. These would keep out the flies and a great deal of dust.

The electric or gas fixtures throughout should be substantial and of good quality, but very plain. The house entrance, if there was one, should if possible be entirely separate from the business premises.

Cleanliness Has First Call.

In my judgment the first consideration in a store where food stuffs are sold should be cleanliness. That is why I would substitute metal and glass for wood whenever possible. The division of the store into sample room and stock room or sales room and work room is primarily also in the interest of cleanliness, but it would also economize space and in my opinion permit of a very much more attractive store.

Nowadays everyone with any hygienic sensibility objects to buying goods that have been displayed on the street exposed to the dust, filth and nastiness of the public thoroughfare. To a degree in proportion to the store's trade the portion open to the public, what we have called the sales room or sample room, is a public thoroughfare. It is my opinion that no food should be exposed to contact with the public and to the dust of even a well kept store. Here is where the silent salesmen cases come in. Samples of all bulk goods should be kept in

THE UNBEATABLE WEST

The grocer was not expected, a little while ago, to be in the van of colonization, but this is a hustling age, especially in the grocery trade, and the accompanying illustration shows a corner of a grocery store in a little western town not yet two years old. How's that ? The store is Smith Bros.' and the town is Camrose, Alberta. The Canadian Grocer is indebted to J. Dawson Manners for the photograph, and quite prepared to take his word for it that Camrose has "the most up-to-date store in Canada, comparing favorably with some of the best stores in larger towns in Ontario."

The basement is an important part of every properly arranged store. It should have a concrete floor fitted with tight drains and bell traps and should be flushed regularly. The walls and ceilings should be plastered with cement mortar and the window sashes should fit tightly. Covering all openings should be fine wire screens to exclude the dust and flies. There should be no plumbing in this lower portion of the building so that there would be no poisonous gases.

them and only taken out to show to customers. For example, consider raisins, prunes, currants, figs and dates. Every particle of dust that touches adheres to them and yet in many groceries they stand exposed for days and weeks to dust and flies and the fingering propensity of the public. The stock of all such goods should be kept in their original packages or dust-proof bins in that part of the store to which the public is not admitted. Teas, meals, coffees, spices, and a multitude of other commodities should be similarly treated.

Saving Space.

In regard to package goods the plea of cleanliness does not apply, but there is the question of space. Why should a grocer provide shelf room for tier upon tier of cans, packages, and bottles, that could be better kept in their original packages ?

I don't suppose everyone will agree with me that the arrangement I propose will make the most attractive store. A manufacturer of fine store fixtures tells me that grocers are the most conservative people he knows, and it may be some grocers would not feel comfortable if they hadn't behind them shelving loaded with goods, counters loaded at either hand and piles and heaps on the floor in front of them. But I think a room with a recently cleaned hard floor furnished with silent salesmen cases filled with samples of goods all under the protection of glass would appeal to the buying public.

The Counter Going.

I have admitted some counter space, but the most forward stores in American cities are banishing the counter, using instead a draw shelf in the wall fixture similar to those provided in the best office desks. In such a store as I have described everything but the goods could be cleaned and if necessary washed often and easily. Some people are suspicious, others are inquisitive ; that is why I would make the partition between the sales room and stock room of iron and glass. It will let the people see that the goods are cleanly kept and carefully handled and it would be a spur to tidiness and neatness on the part of both the grocer and his help.

The interior decoration shown in the accompanying illustration is wholly the work of J. M. Thom, the clerk whose window dressing won Gibbons Bros., Toronto, the first prize in the competition last New Year. The store may look a little crowded, but it certainly presents a very attractive appearance and could not but suggest to customers that Mr. Gibbons had in his heart some of that old-time Christmas cheer, marking him as a safe and comfortable man to deal with.

Lesson in Salesmanship

"I saw a bit of salesmanship in a grocery store this morning which hardly pleased me," said a well known business man to the writer recently. "The clerk under observance was waiting upon a lady customer and he did it nicely until about the end of their interview.

"Then he made two mistakes.

"The lady had given him her order. As she stopped for a moment he said, 'Is that all ?' That was all she could think of at the time.

"As she glanced about the store I wished to whisper in his ear to amend his question by asking her instead, 'What else can we do for you ?'

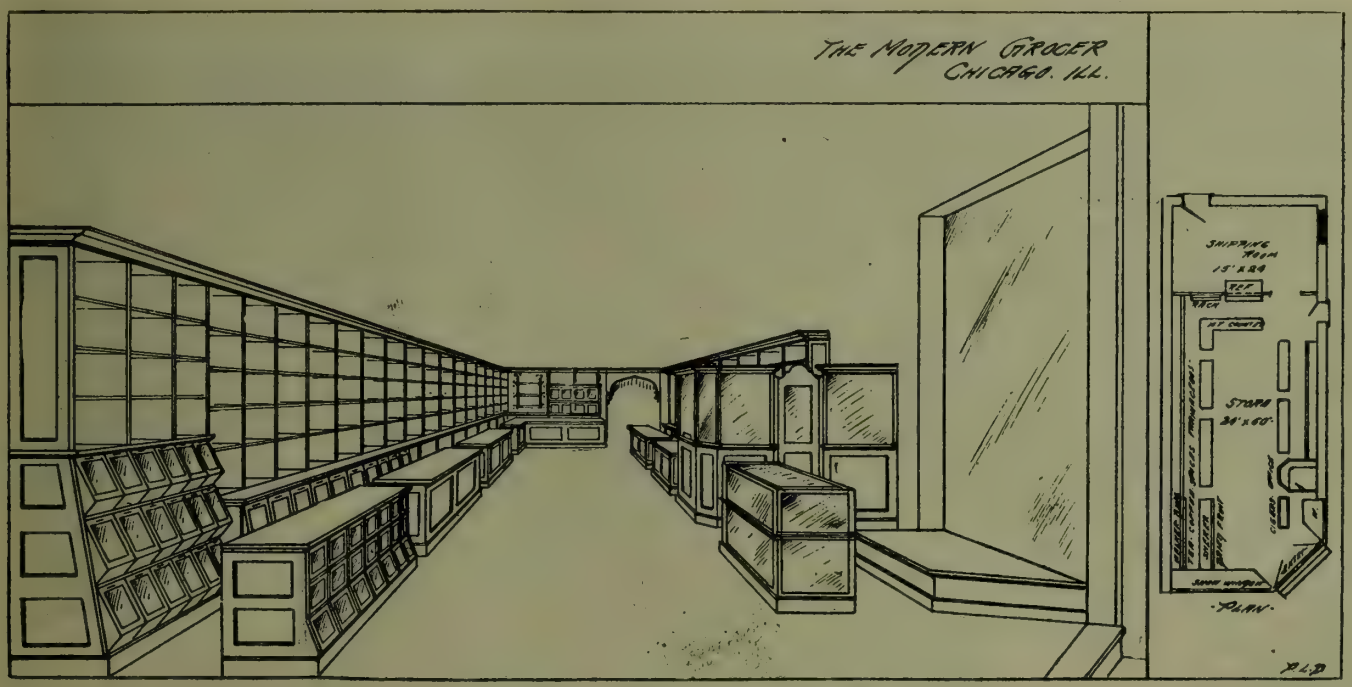
"His next question, however, was a little worse. 'Can't we sell you a little sugar ?'

"Now what could have inspired a salesman to push sugar ?

"It is sold at a constant loss and is always demanded in quantities as large as the customer can use.

"All around the shelves in that particular store I could see articles like club-house cheese, lobsters, salad dressing and other seasonable, profit-paying goods.

"If I were a clerk or a merchant I would let the big stores down town sell all the sugar and I would push goods, the sale of which helps to pay my salary. I would hide away the goods which pay no profit and produce them only when called for, but I would play up and display profit bearing goods."



Grocery Store Plan and Interior Fittings.

The two leading points named by the speaker are worth study.

It is a mark of good salesmanship to never allow the customer to think that the clerk is tired of waiting upon her. It is well, also, to suggest anything except a desire to terminate the interview.

Salesman's tact is the thing most needed. It isn't learned from the books.

Selling tact is a valuable acquisition. It never loses its value, whatever line of business the clerk may in a course of a lifetime embark in.—Ex.

INSIDE DISPLAY.

Scarcely less important than the window displays are those made inside of the store where they are inspected more closely though by less people, says Frank Farrington in Brains. These displays comprise the special sale displays and the many regular showings of staple goods both inside and outside of the show cases.

The same taste ought to be used in these as in the window exhibits though many of the window display rules do not apply. Fixtures are very necessary in showing anything but goods which can be stacked up like cord-wood, and they will add to the selling quality of the exhibit.

The goods should be such that they will not be injured by being handled, as they will be by the public. If you don't want the goods handled, don't leave them where they can be, for it will hurt your store to get the reputation of finding fault with people who want to see what the goods are. You cannot afford to be what they call "persnickity."

Some goods will be stolen and some will be spoiled by soiling in the displays that you make, but just charge them up to advertising, or to profit and loss, if you keep the old-fashioned account, and the result will be satisfactory at the end of the year.

Make your displays timely always, giving special prominence to goods that are in demand on account of their seasonableness. People who shop in good stores are in the habit of depending upon the shops to keep them posted as to what is new and what is seasonable. The reputation of a shop for doing this or for not doing it is easily made.

Change your displays often even though you make up the new displays of the same kind of goods. A new arrangement and a dusting and polishing will make a new display without putting the seasonable goods back out of sight.

Nothing repays a display's trouble much better than the exhibiting of edible articles in tempting array. Fruit, candy, bottled and other package stuff can be placed so that it will be almost impossible for any one to go past without buying. Take advantage of the appetites of your customers. Candy dealers who have tried it say that it is profitable to exhibit candy with the "take one" sign on it. People will help themselves and that is what you want them to do. If the candy is good, they will buy in nearly every case. If it is not, don't put it out on exhibition.

There are many things in the grocery store that will pay for tasty displays where they can at least be seen. Don:t be afraid to hand out samples of such goods. Bread so cast upon the waters is sure to return.

Visit other stores and see how they make use of their display opportunities. That's one of the best ways there is of getting ideas. Next to that comes literature on the subject. Study all of that that you can get and keep it on file. See that your clerks read it too.

Keep in touch with the fixture market and don't let the other fellow find out ways for doubling the display room in his store before you tumble. Be up-to-date and use up-to-dateness to your advantage.

Let the clerks who take care of the stock in the show cases study the arrangement of the stock so that they will always keep the goods showing to the best advantage. Many kinds of goods must be kept under glass and more ingenuity is required to make a display there to attract attention than when the goods can be placed on top of the counter.

Would you show crockery! Show it with the dust off from it and the price on it. Show it right side up and bottom side up, so that any one who wants to know about it can find out without having to call in the crockery specialist to tell her. Information cards ought to go on a great many goods along with the price cards.

Pretty china and glassware attract many a woman and sell on sight where it never would have been asked for at all. You can display a great deal of this sort of goods in racks of shelves that rise in tiers, shelf behind shelf. Set plates and such pieces so that the face and not the edge is visible from the customer's standpoint. The surface of a plate, even a cheap plate, is generally very pretty and attractive. The edge of a plate, or the edges of a pile of cheap plates, are pretty apt to be so uneven that their cheapness becomes obvious. It doesn't pay to put the weak points of cheap bargain goods on exhibition. You may not want to deceive the public — you won't do it if you value your business reputation, but honesty does not call for a merchant's putting the worst foot forward.

In the crockery departments you must have plenty of room for the public to pass among the tables without danger of knocking anything off on the floor. To make it possible for a customer to cause damage is to make it possible to lose that customer. You may decline to accept pay for the breakage, but the embarrassment caused the customer will often drive her away for months at least.

Stand all breakage yourself, but make it as small as possible by taking precautions in advance.

In general, the same care and the same judgment is needed about inside displays that are required for windows. The same rules hold good as to colors and many other principles. There should be display all over the store and judgment in all its details is necessary to insure success. Attention to detail is necessary anywhere to make success.

Educate your clerks to that idea and see that they live up to it. First, though, you must live up to it yourself.

Progress in a General Store

Krug's, at Tavistock, furnishes a good example of the general store that is conducted along progressive lines. Nearly everything on the calendar that could be handled by such an establishment is carried, and strong competition has to be met from Stratford, eight miles away, and Woodstock, fourteen miles away. To hold its share of the trade under such conditions the store must be able to offer good attractive features.

Among the lines carried are general dry goods, millinery, men's furnishings, clothing, house furnishings, groceries, boots and shoes, crockery, glassware and graniteware, hardware, stationery, paints and varnishes, and builders' supplies. There is also a custom tailoring department. The store is 120 feet long and two floors are occupied.

"The mail order houses do not disturb us very much," said J. F. Krug. "We watch them pretty closely, and are just as much interested in their catalogues and other literature as anyone. We are then able to size up our own prices and make it worth while for the people to trade at home. An eye is always kept on Stratford and Woodstock also. We advertise in the newspapers from these places which circulate in the country districts, and in several other papers besides.

"Generally speaking, we aim to conduct our store on city methods as far as possible. As a means of keeping in touch with what is going on we find trade papers very valuable. We subscribe for a sufficient number to cover every line that we carry.

"General stores are getting out of the rut that they followed for so long. It must be done if business is not to go elsewhere. I have mentioned the advertising that we do. We also use attractive show cards to draw attention to particular articles and prices. Stock is carefully gone over regularly and slow lines in dry goods, etc., are put out on tables in the centre of the floor and turned into cash at such reductions as make them sell readily.

"Another thing that is bettering the position of the general store is closer collecting of accounts. There is no reason why this cannot be done. In some instances you find merchants are backward about asking payment within reasonable time because they are afraid of offending old friends. If they are going to be up-to-date and gain a standing where they can look competition square in the face accounts must be rendered regularly and settlement insisted upon. By lax methods in this respect a great deal of money is lost. The time is approaching when every merchant must be able to buy for cash and get his discounts. How can he do so if his customers are not made to adjust themselves to more business-like terms?"

tailoring orders that we counted on getting," continued Mr. Krug. "We saw at once where the trouble was, and reorganized this department without delay. A young man from Toronto was placed in charge, and we have regained old orders and new ones besides. It costs something to maintain a first-class man, but it pays handsomely as soon as he gets things in running order."

Butter, eggs, hides, dressed poultry, lard, bacon and hams are taken in exchange for goods to any amount. To do business on this plan a man requires to have expert knowledge of these commodities, and to constantly watch market conditions. To Krug's, exchange of this kind is just as good as cash, and perhaps a little better. There is the profit on the goods in the first place, and a profit also out of the butter, eggs, etc. The farmers like this system.

store for thirty-six years, and his personality is a valuable asset to the business. At inventory time the stock amounts to about $35,000, and $3,000 of this is represented by the glassware department.

"We carry finer lines now than ever before," stated J. F. Krug in conclusion, "and while we are able to show the people of this district that the values are here, we can count on their loyalty to us."

Tavistock has a population of 1,500.

Store Fitting for $750

The grocery interior shown in the accompanying plan was designed for an Handsome Store Front, Sherbrooke, Que.

"The Glasgow Warehouse," as the Krug store is called, is located in the centre of a very fine district, and the city merchants are always on the alert to attract buyers to themselves. Some time ago a Woodstock store announced that it would lay carpets and hang curtains bought from it free of charge. Krug's felt the effect of this, but followed suit in short order, and has maintained the practice ever since.

At Fall fair time in Tavistock, a year ago, another city store put up a good-sized tent to accommodate a display of furs, and had a staff of salesmen in charge. Krug's immediately offset this by filling the store windows with furs that bore comparison.

"One season not long ago a city store captured a large number of the custom for it saves them the trouble of going to market. During the months of July, August and September every egg is candled—that is, examined by the light of a candle—and none but the perfectly good are accepted. As high as 1,200 dozen have been received in one day. The store is in connection with real good firms, to whom these commodities are shipped. By maintaining high quality, and quantity also, good prices are secured.

Krug's millinery department is a success. Accumulation is kept down to the minimum by very careful buying, though not in such a way as to interfere with the standing of the department in the eyes of the public. A formal opening is held, and an elaborate display given.

Mr. Krug, Sr., has conducted this

Ohio grocer and is reproduced from the Modern Grocer. The store is 24x65 feet and 15 feet at the rear is partitioned off for a shipping room, leaving the store proper 24x50 feet. The entrance is at the corner, as shown in the plan, and located just beyond this, on the right hand side, a window opens on the side street, and in front of that is the cigar case. A small stock pattern tobacco case could be set on the bulkhead in the rear of the cigar case if desired. The shelving and counters extend back to the side door, as shown.

In the rear, set in the partition, is the refrigerator, which is iced from the shipping room. A wrought iron rack for holding hams and bacon is fastened to the wall at the left of the refrigerator, and in front of the latter is an L-shaped marble-topped counter, on which the meat is handled.

The last three sections of shelving at the rear end of the room on the left are to be used for canned meats, fish, delicacies, and goods of a like nature. On the left, in front, is a three-tier set of Walker bins, which are fixed permanently against the wall. The bins are supplied with plate glass display fronts, and are used for teas, coffees and spices. In front of the Walker bins is a counter with display apartments below for dried fruits. At the rear, farther down, are bins for farinaceous goods, sugars, bulk crackers, etc. Above these bins are shelves, on which crackers in tins, and miscellaneous package goods may be placed. Beyond these, in front, are the service counters, which are divided in the rear for bags and paper. There is also a twine drawer for holding reserve balls to fill holders.

The cost of this fitting, in plain oak, would be about $725.00.

Strictly Cash Business

T. A. Forman has carried on a strictly cash business in Woodstock, Ont., for seventeen years. However, his faith in the feasibility of this basis of operation, even in a good-sized village, extends farther back than that. His home was formerly at Port Perry, Ont., where his father was proprietor of a general store. The business was conducted along the ordinary lines, which included a substantial element of credit. Young Forman conceived the belief that this could be done away with altogether, and cash exacted for all purchases. While readily allowing the great advantages that would accrue from such a course, his father did not think it practicable. At this time—twenty-two years ago—Port Perry had a population of only two thousand, so the field was somewhat limited for the test of such a radical change. Finally he acceded in part to the desire of his son, who, with his brother—now conducting "The Fair" at Ingersoll, Ont. — started in with enthusiasm to prove the merit of the plan, even as applied to a place of that size. They were given full charge of the dry goods department, which they separated entirely from the rest of the business. A rigid cash basis was instituted, and at the end of the first year the sales amounted to double what they had been any year under the old system. Mr. Forman proved that his theory could be put into practice, and he has stood by it ever since, with, he states, splendid results.

"When I first came to Woodstock and announced that I purposed doing a cash business, there were plenty of people to tell me that it couldn't be done, and it was prophesied that I would not last long. That was seventeen years ago, and I'm here yet.

"I have always had confidence in the public acceptance of the cash basis, with its advantages to both merchant and customer, and have shown that it can be made a success. I buy for cash and sell for cash, and in that way have no trouble in figuring on close profits.

"We feel the mail order houses here very little, but there is no denying that they have had some effect in the direction of educating the public to pay cash for their goods. Then, a store that refuses credit helps its competitors to a certain extent. A lady coming in here always has the money in her pocket to pay for what she wants. If she does not find the article that suits her, she goes elsewhere and is not likely to have it charged.

"You will doubtless hear in many quarters that it is impossible to do a cash business in a small city or town and have any great degree of success. I'll tell you where the trouble lies. The system is all right, but in most cases of failure the merchant himself is to blame. He advertises that his terms are strictly cash, and starts out with the determination of maintaining that principle. He does so in most instances, but someone, probably of influence in his town, comes along and asks for credit. That person, we will say, is a good customer, and sooner than run the risk of giving offence and losing the trade, he departs from the rule that he has laid down, believing that no harm will result, and that his transgression will not be known. That is where he starts to undermine the success of his plan.

"You know there are in every town a number of people who consider themselves privileged, and they are the ones whom the merchant finds it hard to refuse when they ask to have an account opened. When I started here some of these people came to me, expecting to be exempt from the cash terms which I had advertised. I promptly declined to extend credit, even in the smallest degree. They were generally indignant, and did not come back for a considerable time, but they could not deny that I was justified in acting as I had done; in fact, they talked about it, and this proved a good advertisement for my business. The public soon got to know that I treated everyone alike, and then I had their confidence. That was a big step in advance. It is evident that business generally is working round more and more toward a cash basis."

Neatness in the Store

It sounds simple enough to say you and your clerks are neat, as is also your store, but is it a fact? Is your store such that your critical customers cannot find any fault with it in this respect, or is it only a half-hearted attempt at neatness?

In the present day of competition all these little things count. The public like to patronize a store where everything is bright and clean and neat. They know then that in the natural course of events the merchant's goods will be wholesome. With such a store he would not tolerate second-class merchandise. This is the way the people feel about it, and every little thing makes an impression upon them. If your clerks wear neat white aprons, if your shelves are neatly dressed, and show evidence of care, then these points are considered, and your prospective customer forms all the better opinion of yourself and your store. And once you get started in the right way, it is a very easy matter to keep things in order if the matter is constantly attended to. There should be a place assigned to everything, and everything should be kept in its place. White aprons for your clerks cost very little, and will bring you in returns in the way of good will on the part of customers.

To put it to yourself, is there anything that looks so bad, on entering a store, as a clerk looking as though neatness and cleanliness were foreign to his nature? It strikes you at once that the proprietor of this store must be careless, that he is an easy-going sort of a fellow, caring nothing for the future, but content to make a bare living to-day. While on the contrary if you drop into a store and are met by a smiling clerk, neat in appearance, and your wants filled quickly and satisfactorily, are you not likely to go back there again? Everything looked so fresh and clean that you could not help remarking the fact. And did you not also notice that business was brisk in this store, while there was nothing like good trade passing in the store first mentioned, where perhaps a strong odor of onions met your nostrils as soon as you opened the door.

Neatness is something of an asset to the grocer, and the merchant who overlooks it is not going to make such a success of his business as is he who is always on the alert for neatness and cleanliness in his clerks and in his store.

WORLD'S CEREAL PRODUCTION

The collection and comparison of figures concerning the world's production of cereals reveals many interesting facts and the accompanying diagrams place some of these before the reader in concrete form. It is especially interesting to note the position Canada holds with other nations interested in cereal production.

The agricultural wealth of a country depends to some extent upon its area, and still more upon its population, but there are other factors, such as the nature of the soil, climatic conditions, and the character of the people, which have a large influence in determining the agricultural importance of a nation.

Canada ranks second only to Asiatic Russia in extent of territory, but there is a large percentage of this which cannot be utilized for agriculture. In the "barrens" of the northern part there are perhaps 1,000 million acres. There are 800 million acres of forest land, a large portion of which will no doubt eventually come under cultivation. There are 200,000,000 acres of grazing land, and 200,000,000 suitable for agriculture. There are at present about 30,000,000 acres of improved land, of which only one-third is in cereals. As regards the land, therefore, Canada has almost unlimited opportunity for development as a cereal producer. The population, six millions or thereabouts, is not sufficient to place her in the first rank as a producer of cereals. In the charts, Canada accordingly stands low as a producer. Her appearance, however, is proportionately much better as an exporter.

Asiatic Russia, with a population of World's Production of Cereals in Billions of Pounds.

20,000,000, has 27,000,000 acres of cultivated land, of which 12,000,000 are in cereals. Its total area is 3,980 million acres, of which 1,800 million acres are waste. There are 1,400 million acres of forest; 300 million acres suitable for pasture land; 500 million suitable for cultivation.

Russia in Europe has 124 million people, and, with 200 million acres of pasture land and 350 of cultivable land, ranks high as an agricultural nation. Only about 230 million acres are actually cultivated and of these 180 millions are in cereals.

The United States ranks with Russia as one of the greatest producers and exporters. It comprises 1,900 million acres, with a population of nearly 80,000,000. It has about 100,000,000 acres of waste land.

Australia has about the same area as the United States, with about 4,000,000 people. Eleven hundred million acres of waste land, made up chiefly of arid regions in the interior, and 100 million acres of forest land leave 700 million acres, and of these only 100 millions are suitable for cultivation. There are only 13 million acres actually cultivated, of which 7 are in cereals. There are about 600 million acres suited for pastoral purposes and these are largely occupied by the herds of sheep and cattle. While some of this pasture land may, as population and means of transportation increase, become farm land, still the arid region in the centre precludes it ever having a large population engaged in agriculture.

Argentina has about 5,400,000 people. It is largely devoted to pastoral industries. There are about 300 million acres suited to grazing and 150 millions for cultivation. There are only about 30 million acres cultivated, of which about 18 millions are in cereals. Mexico has a still smaller area, although its population is 13,000,000. About 200 million acres are suited to pasture and 100 millions to cultivation.

India has 400 million acres of cultivable land, although only 250 million acres are actually cultivated, of which 160 millions are in the leading cereals, including millet. Here again there is rich land, but oft recurring famines. India has nearly 300 million people, so that less than one acre per inhabitant is actually cultivated, although there are about 150 million acres suitable for cultivation lying idle.

The failure of the monsoons brings famine to many portions of India, and this despite the fact that other sections are exporting cereals. In the olden days grain was stored in the different villages in good years, so as to have a supply for bad years. The improved transportation system has resulted in the exporting of this grain.

China has, according to Williams, 650 million acres of cultivated land, or more than any other country in the world. In the chart it is left blank, representing cultivable area, because some more modern travelers claim that not more than one-half of the area of China is cultivated. They claim while in certain sections there is intensive culture of the most extreme character, alongside of them are areas suited to pasture or forests that are entirely neglected. China has the advantage of very rich soil in the "loess" regions north of the Yang-tse-kiang. But even here when there is an immense rainfall famine occurs, as the water then all runs off and crops are a failure.

The population of China, according to official statistics, is 407 millions, but most travelers say this is exaggerated.

Without question China produces large quantities of food products for man, but it has practically no pasture lands.

Statistics of Chinese agriculture are practically nil, even the best that can be done in rice is to accept estimates of careful observers. China north of the Yang-tse-kiang raises wheat, millet, barley, maize, and other similar products, and south of that river rice is the leading food product.

EASTERN TOWNSHIP WHOLESALE GROCERY.

The City of Sherbrooke, P.Q., is the distributing centre of a large and prosperous district, being located in the heart of the famous Eastern Townships. Among its best known firms is that of T. A. Bourque & Co., registered. Established in the year 1880 by T. A. Bourque as wholesale grocers and provision dealers, it has from a small beginning reached a foremost rank in the grocery purveying line. Two years ago the business was bought by J. T. Poulin and S. Robitaille, two young and energetic grocers. Mr. Poulin has had a long experience in the retail and wholesale grocery trade and for seven years previous to opening in Sherbrooke, was connected with the well known Montreal wholesale grocery house of Laporte, Martin & Cie., Limited, in the capacity of Eastern Townships representative. Mr. Robitaille, though a young man, received his training under Mr. Bourque, and his thirteen years' connection with the firm makes him conversant with the detail of the business. Mr. Poulin looks after the firm's customers in the Eastern Townships as far east as Megantic and west to Farnham, and as he covered the same territory for his former firm, commands a good and increasing share of the local trade. T. A. Bourque & Co.'s offices, sample rooms and warehouse are located at 156 Wellington street, in the very heart of the business section of the city. Their large storage warehouse is located at 221 Wellington street near the railway.

The company besides staple groceries and provisions are direct importers of fancy English, French and American groceries, as well as Eastern Townships agents for a number of well known Canadian firms, among them D. S. Perrin & Co., London, and Viau & Frere, Montreal. They have introduced and obtain a good trade in their special brands of pickles, spices, baking powders, "Duchess" brand coffees, etc.

A great impetus has been given to the trade of T. A. Bourque & Co., registered, since Messrs. Poulin and Robitaille purchased the business two years ago, and with the up-to-date ideas and the energy and determination shown by the partners, T. A. Bourque & Co., registered, is bound to become a large factor in the jobbing trade of the Eastern Townships.

Tea Makers Cleanly

It is erroneously claimed that only the handling of tea by machinery—the real recommendations of which are despatch, economy and uniformity of grade — insures safety from disease germs, the inference being that danger lurks in a hand prepared tea ; but, as a matter of fact, the belief that the Chinese and Japanese are uncleanly in their habits is an exploded one. So far as the Japs are concerned, the narrative of the manner in which they survived the league at Port Arthur is sufficient answer to that charge ; and the Chinaman is described as always washing himself, whenever he can find a teacup of water to do it with. Then, too, the native processes are carried on in the country districts, where, according to a high authority, S. Wells Williams ("The Middle Kingdom"), orderliness, thrift and industry prevail, not in the overcrowded and low quarters of the great cities. It may be remarked in this connection that the fire and earthquake at San Francisco, which brought to the light of day his many so-called foul burrows, disclosed the fact that, however dark and devious his ways and quarters might have been, they were not unsanitary, despite their hivelike character. Besides, whether tea be prepared by hand or machine, it is "fired"—roasted—and the germ, which has been proven capable of withstanding a degree of cold approaching the ultimate zero, cannot survive this operation. Again, to make tea, boiling water is a necessity, and the germ does not live that can survive 212 degrees Fahrenheit. This erroneous belief may fairly be classed with that other bogy, that green teas are injurious because they get their color from being cured in copper pans, when, as a matter of fact, they are fired in iron pans, which gives them a slight color, and those that are brought to the western markets (the Orientals do not use them, but a tea that has been subjected to less firing) are colored artificially. But this coloring matter does not amount to more than 1 per cent. ; of this 1 per cent., 1 per cent. is Prussian blue (a vegetable which some people eat), and 99 per cent. is soapstone, which, being a mineral, settles in the liquid.

It is said that this coloring matter, or "facing," was first used in the days of old sailing ships ; as it took six months of sea travel before delivery unfermented tea was apt to be injured by the absorption of sea air, and so this facing was applied as a preservative. It imparted the greyish blue color called green, and, foreign consumers becoming accustomed to it, it was thought unsafe to send them the unfermented teas unfaced, though, as is proved in the case of Formosa tea, it can readily be done without injury in these days of swift ocean steamers.

PEANUT GROWING.

"Few people who buy a bag of peanuts on the street for five cents realize the extent of the peanut industry," said A. P. Bryan, of Norfolk, Va. "It is a fact that the total sales of peanuts amount annually to between $8,000,000 and $10,000,000, and some salesmen sell as high as 1,000,000 bushels each year.

"The seeds of the peanut are planted like beans, and when the vines have come up and the nuts are ready for harvesting, the farmer takes a cultivator especially made for that purpose and starts down the long rows. On either side of this cultivator are two long knives which sink into the ground sufficiently to cut the tap root of the vine. The same process is gone through with on the other side of the vine. The main root being thus severed and the ground loosened, the vines are lifted into shocks like corn. They are cured by allowing them to stand in the sun for about ten days, when colored women and children are sent into the field to pick the nuts from the vines. An average picker will pick about five bushels a day, for which he is paid at the rate of ten cents a bushel.

"It is not known how peanuts first came to this country. Both Africa and Asia claim the distinction of being the home of this vegetable. Its first record in the United States dates back to 1850. In 1861, the crop amounted to about 50,000 bushels, but it was the circus that really made the peanut a valuable article of commerce. At the present time the crop amounts to about 11,000,000 bushels annually. Virginia and North Carolina still maintain their lead, but Tennessee now raises about 800,000 bushels, though of an inferior quality. Of the ordinary variety about twenty-two pounds make a bushel."

QUALITY OF SALESMANSHIP

Some Views of the "Ad" Man—Honesty the Greatest Virtue The Square Deal" Always Pays—Capacity to Read Human Nature.

Salesmanship is a great thing. I've been studying it a little on the side lately. You see, since I've been the advertising man of this store I don't do much in the way of selling goods myself, but I keep my eye out for anything along the salesmanship line because I'm looking out for all kinds of ways to brace up the business.

The boss' nephew says I'm getting the swelled head since I'm the "ad man," and maybe I am, but I seem to be making good right along and that's more than he is doing, so I don't worry much over the size of my head.

After watching the fellows in the store for a while I've about come to the conclusion that nine men in ten can get to be good salesmen if they go at it to learn just as they'd try to learn to be good artists or good singers. There's a good deal to learn before you can step in behind the counter and sell a man something that he isn't suited with at first sight, and it isn't to be picked up in a minute, and a salesman needs systematic education.

Some men say that it isn't worth while to take all the pains of learning to be a professional salesman when they don't intend to stay behind the counter all their lives. They say that a man can't afford to work too hard at something that will never pay him more than a clerk's wages.

Unlikely Candidates for Promotion.

Of course that's all right if he is satisfied to remain a clerk all his days, but it always struck me that the chap who is afraid of doing his work too well isn't exactly the most likely candidate for promotion. I didn't get my promotion by being afraid I'd spend more time learning about my job than I was getting paid for.

The fellow who wants to be his own boss sometime won't be a very good one if he doesn't know anything about what his men ought to be doing and how they ought to be doing it. Most every man who has made a mark on the top rung of the ladder has begun by making a good deep mark on the bottom rung first.

I believe that some fellows have the knack of telling just what sort of a customer they have as soon as they hear the man or woman ask for what they want. That's reading human nature, I suppose. I never was very good at it naturally and all I learned along that line came by just studying the people I met every minute.

I found that I learned to judge a customer about as well as any one and I could handle them to the advantage of the house where I had been losing them altogether before. And I found out one thing, you don't want to load every customer up with all the goods he'll buy. When I first began, I had the idea that the crack salesman was the man who could sell a customer the most goods—just pile on all that he could possibly be made to take away and pay for.

I worked on that basis for a while until I saw a few cases where men I'd loaded up with too much of something that wouldn't keep forever, sort o' went back on the store. Then I tumbled to the great principle of salesmanship. You may know more about this thing than I do. If you do, you know that the man who is the best salesman is the man who makes the most and the best satisfied customers. Real salesmanship is making satisfied customers and that's the secret of the whole thing, if it is a secret at all.

A Salesman's Greatest Virtue.

You can't make a satisfied customer by selling a person what that person doesn't want, or what won't give that person satisfaction when it is taken home.

The kind of a salesman to be is the kind that people come back and ask for. When a man gets to pleasing the people he waits on so well that they want to do business with him again, then he has made himself worth something to the store and he is getting in line for a raise.

The greatest virtue in a salesman is honesty. It pays to be honest and it pays in real money. There's nothing to be made in any kind of chicanery. I've tried it and I know. I've tried to make people think that Brazilian turp was pure turpentine and had 'em go away believing it and I've had 'em come back knowing that I fooled 'em. It doesn't pay and it's mighty unpleasant when you get caught trying.

Folks aren't as anxious to trade with a chap who is smooth and smiling as they are to buy from the fellow who tells them things just as they are and who does it every time and gets the reputation for doing it.

A man can't fool a customer once without taking chances of ruining his reputation for a long while with that one customer any way. It takes just about two minutes to fool a man and it takes sometimes two years to get back to where you stood with him before you fooled him.

Don't Pay to Fool Customers.

You can't get around the fact that honesty is the mental and moral foundation of good salesmanship. No man ever yet got a lot of customers going regularly to a store unless he treated them right every time he did business with them. People know when they are robbed or fooled, and they don't always come around and kick about it either. As a matter of fact probably about as many just say nothing and don't come back to really make a kick.

The man who comes back and complains gives you a chance to square yourself with him, but the fellow who just makes up his mind that you are crooked and lets it go at that, keeping away from you and advising his friends to do the same, does you a lot of harm that you probably deserve — unless you didn't deceive him on purpose.

There's a good deal more to being honest than just not taking things that don't belong to you. Any man can be honest in the eyes of the law, just seeing that he doesn't do anything that he could be arrested for, and yet cheat people right and left. If you don't want to be honest because it's the right thing to do and because you know that you haven't any business being anything else, then you won't be honest enough to hurt you any. When I go out to buy things myself, I don't want to go up against the fellow who's only just as honest as he has to be.

This isn't any preachment. It's just straight business talk, and any young clerk who thinks that there is money in the "slick" school of salesmanship has my permission to experiment if he wants to, but if I were looking for a clerk I wouldn't hire him if he were the last man in the line.

Salesmanship may be made up of other things than honesty, and it certainly is, but they don't cut much of a figure if the honesty part is left out.

THE ONLY PEBBLE.

Housekeeper—"Have you any Mocha coffee, sir?"

Small Dealer—"Yes, mum."

"Genuine mocha?"

"Just imported, mum."

"Import it yourself?"

"Oh, yes, mum. I send my orders direct to the—the Sultan, mum."

"Humph! How much have you on hand?"

" 'Bout sixty pounds, mum."

"You have, eh, sixty pounds? I read in the paper this very morning that not over fifty pounds of genuine Mocha reached this country annually."

"Yes, mum, that's true. I had ten pounds over from last year."

Business Management

By HOWARD R. WELLINGTON.

The Eighth in a Series of Articles on a Subject of Interest to Every Retailer.

HAVING all the transactions now recorded in closing the books, we will proceed to take off a trial balance and open a trading account, to ascertain the profits for the period.

It is not at all probable that a small retailer will devote the time necessary each month to take off a trial balance, but this should be done at least once in three months. Customers should receive monthly accounts in order that any existing differences may be adjusted before the transaction has been so old that neither party recollects the circumstances, and, besides, collections will be looked after to much better advantage. It is the dealer who is regular with his accounts, sending invoices or memos with the goods when delivered, and statements on the first of each month, who collects his accounts first. It will be noticed in the trial balance for the end of the period that the proprietor's account stands the same as at the start, although a period of business transactions has been entered through the books. In this connection it might be explained that as soon as the profit for the period has been ascertained from the trading and profit and loss account, the net amount is credited to the proprietor's account, which shows the additional capital investment in the business, less any withdrawals as ascertained from his personal account, which account may be transferred at the end of each period to the debit of the proprietor's account.

GETTING AT THE NET PROFIT.

WE have already found from our merchandise account that the gross profit (that is, the profit on the goods sold, not taking into account any expenses) amounts to $4,850 for the period.

In order to show more clearly how the net profits are arrived at, the trading account, as per illustration, includes as well the merchandise account, (already shown separately), and this would be a much simpler method in a small business where only a few accounts are kept, and expenses are not sub-divided into a number of different expense accounts.

We find that the net profits for the period amount to $2,355, which amount is now transferred direct to the proprietor's capital account, which, in addition to the statement of the present condition of the business, will be shown later.

In explanation of the expense account, which amounts in this instance to $2,495, it might be said that a number of sub-divisions for this account could be kept, such as salaries account, rent and taxes account, insurance, light, fuel accounts, and sundry expense account, in order to arrive at the proportion for each expense to be added to the cost price of goods to obtain the selling prices. In a small business, if reasonable care is exercised in distinguishing between expenses and additions to the equipment or store, no difficulty should be experienced in arriving at the correct net profits for a period.

The items of freight and cash discounts should undoubtedly be charged to merchandise account, as these allowances are allowed on, or deducted from, the invoice price of goods.

A great many look upon cash discount as an item to be treated somewhat the same as bank interest, being a rebate for preparing the invoice before the net due date. The method in most favor, however, is to treat this item as an allowance, to be deducted from the actual invoice cost of the goods. It would be interesting and almost invaluable for the retail merchant to have his expense account so divided to enable him to know at the end of a period's business exactly the outlay for, say, salaries, delivery, rent and taxes, insurance, light, etc., in order that he may ascertain the percentage which each one of these items bears to his sales. In this way, if any expense item is out of all proportion to the business done, all his energies may be centred on this particular item, with the object of reducing the amount.

These divisions may easily be obtained by having extra columns in the cash book or marking the various items as soon as posted to the ledger.

A COMMERCIAL GRAVEYARD.

A Toronto grocer well up in the trade and of long experience, speaking recently to a representative of the Canadian Grocer, said: "If it were asked of two hundred of Toronto's foremost grocers exactly what it costs them to do business, not fifty could answer the question. In small matters of cost is where many of them fail. They do not think it necessary to put down many of the small items, and it is these that rapidly mount up. Consequently many, by not keeping careful account, mark their goods at a lower price than the dealer who knows the real cost of doing business, and who knows that to make a profit he cannot afford to recede from his marked price. The man who underestimates the cost of doing business sooner or later begins to feel that trade is going against him. Finally, if he perseveres, he fails, and the failure to rightly appraise the cost of doing business is the larger commercial graveyard."

"Is there any portion of the fowl you prefer, major?" asked the hostess blandly.

"The left wing, if you please."

"The left wing?"

"Yes," retorted the major, gazing dubiously at the platter. "I believe it is always good military tactics to bring the left wing of a veteran corpse into action."

CHEER UP.

Next to business ability cheerfulness is the largest natural asset of the grocer. The grouchy man should stay out of the trade. He may make a living; he can never be a success. Cheerfulness if of many kinds. There is the boisterous, jocular, good-nature of the hail-fellow-well-met. There is the quiet, complacent humor that surveys the world and itself with a kindly eye. An idealistic example of the latter class is the Cherryble brothers in Charles Dickens' Nicholas Nickleby. In actual life the happy old gentleman would be characterized by stronger evidence of business acumen, but the gist of success is there.

Worry and cheerfulness won't mix — moral, don't worry. A young manufacturer in Toronto, employing a score of men, met an old gentleman who said to him:

"You're worrying."

The young man admitted he was losing a little sleep.

"You're worrying about how you'll meet your obligations," pursued the mind-reader positively.

Another admission.

"Well, you quit worrying and put the energy you're using up that way into your business and you'll take care of your debts all right."

Years after, when the manufacturer had accumulated a substantial fortune, though still a young man, he said, "I took his advice and I've never worried about money matters since."

Cheerfulness is a natural endowment, but it may be cultivated, may even be acquired. Putting away worry is an act of the will and may be greatly developed.

"Cheer up" should be painted large on every grocery business.

SALVATION IN THE SOIL.

Back to the farm is the motto James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern Railway, would have the American people adopt. In the course of an after dinner speech in Chicago the other night after stating that by 1950 the population of the republic would be more than 200,000,000, he said:

"Practically speaking, our public lands are all occupied. The irrigation of land by the general Government will do something, but all present plans will furnish land for less than 1,500,000 small farms of forty acres each or for a population of 7,000,000 or 8,000,000. Our other natural resources have been exploited with a lavish hand. Our exports, of which we love to boast, consist mostly of the products of the soil. Our iron and coal supplies will begin to show signs of exhaustion before fifty years have passed. The former, at the present rate of increasing production, will be greatly reduced.

"Our forests are rapidly going, our vast supply of mineral oil flows to the ends of the earth. We cannot continue to supply the whole world and recruit our own resources by the methods of trade that now obtain, because the minerals stored in the ground do not recreate themselves. Once used they are gone forever. We shall, with these coming millions to provide for, be thrown back upon the soil, the only resource of mankind that is capable of infinite renewal. Upon the cultivation of the soil depends the future of mankind, and the nature and stability of its institutions.

"In some things we are going backward. The soils of the country are being impoverished by careless treatment. Forests are cut down that the sun may bake it, and the floods scour it into the ocean. It has been cropped with the same grain year after year until its productive power has deteriorated. The census returns show an actual decrease in farm values in a large number of the states. It is easily demonstrable that a reform of methods of cultivation would double the agricultural products and add from five to six billion dollars to the national wealth, while the resort to small farms and the adoption of intensive cultivation would give an equal increment.

"The costliest error will be in a clinging to the delusion that we are to continue to increase our exports and to live upon the profits of the foreign market. The time is coming when we shall need our wheat crop for home consumption and seed, when our mines will not yield, except at increased cost, the iron and coal required to manufacture commodities consumed at home, and when the cheap labor of the Orient, whose wages we cannot hope to meet, equipped with our machinery will vanquish all competitors. To a return to agriculture, to a jealous care of our land resources, we must come without delay if we are to escape disaster."

CREDIT BETTER THAN CASH.

James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern Railway, has sold the iron properties of the railway to the New York Steel Corporation for $400,000,000. Being the principal stockholder of the Great Northern, the deal places him well forward as one of the richest men of the world. Mr. Hill had a talk with a newspaperman afterwards.

"This was a tremendously big transaction," the interviewer commented. "You are quoted as saying there were at least 700,000,000 tons. How much is there?"

"How can I tell? There's a great deal of ore. It has been estimated at between 400,000,000 and 600,000,000 tons."

"Enough to last the world a long time?"

"Yes, enough to last the world a long time."

"How does it feel, Mr. Hill, to be one of the richest men in the world? What are you going to do with all that money? A yearly income, after ten years, of $14,230,000. Or don't you care for money? I have been told that your only realization is developing the Northwest."

"No, I don't care for money. I have had all I want for a great many years. There is something a great deal better than money."

"And that?"

"Credit. Plenty of credit. It is a great thing to have. I am glad to have plenty of credit."

Mr. Hill just hinted that this would be his last financial transaction, the heaviest, he admitted, that he had ever been engaged in, and that he had it in mind to retire from a strenuous business career.

"I'm getting perilously near three score and ten," he remarked, "and I don't want to die, like the trooper's horse, with my shoes on."

BUSINESS FAILURES.

Canadian failures for nine months of 1906 as reported to Bradstreet's number 901, involving $6,803,125 of liabilities, a decrease of 11.6 per cent. in number and of 36.2 per cent. in liabilities from the same period a year ago. Failures, assets and liabilities in Canada in nine months for ten years past follow:

	Number.	Assets.	Liabilities.
1906....	901	$2,983,773	$ 6,803,125
1905....	1,020	5,162,992	10,676,595
1904....	832	3,328,256	7,696,688
1903....	712	2,887,323	6,274,132
1902.....	851	2,759,989	6,300,413
1901.....	1,041	4,160,670	9,376,495
1900.....	1,002	3,017,784	7,441,667
1899.....	975	3,501,274	8,585,901
1898.....	1,091	3,271,772	7,592,510
1897.....	1,501	4,141,860	10,653,212

What do these figures mean? Remembering it is for nine months, the failures last year were two-thirds as numerous and the liabilities about the same as in 1897, when the country was still in the grip of hard times. But the failures last year were just about as many and the liabilities much larger than in 1898. It looks as if grim failure takes its toll of the business world regardless of good times or bad, and lends color to the assertion that most failures result from the lack of knowledge of the cost of doing business.

DAIRY PRODUCE IN ENGLAND.

The Canadian commercial agent at Bristol (Eng.), W. A. McKinnon, has been reading the annual Colonial Dairy Produce Review and writes in the Government's weekly report:

This Review states that the supplies of butter from Australia continue to increase. For the twelve months ending June, 1906, the total imports amounted to 26,950 tons, as against 23,368 tons in the previous year, and this in spite of a partial drought in Queensland and New South Wales in the early part of the season.

The exports from New Zealand for the same year were 15,177 tons, a reduction of 490 tons as compared with the previous twelve month. High prices for cheese apparently caused New Zealanders to make more of that product and less butter, the exports of cheese having increased by nearly 30 per cent., the total being 5,870 tons.

The quantity of butter exported from Canada is also affected, if not governed, by the profit to be made on cheese. The exports of butter from Canada amounted to 15,145 tons, an increase on the previous year's output of 2,298 tons, making a record so far as Canada is concerned, the previous highest amount having been 13,238 tons in 1903.

Out of a total import of 130,062 tons of cheese into the United Kingdom for the year ending 30th of June, 1906, Canada supplied 95,884 tons—over eight times the quantity received from the next largest exporting country, namely, Holland.

There is a noticeable change in the dietary of the working classes of the country, cheese being to some extent replaced by the cheap and excellent qualities of frozen mutton and beef, which are now regularly found on the tables of the artisans. Since the beginning of the year a large and unusually heavy consumption of cheese has been noticed; this is attributed to the tinned meat scare, and is one of the unexpected results of the Chicago scandals.

It would appear likely that owing to the trying Spring and hot Summer, the production of butter and cheese in the United Kingdom will be much smaller than last year. There has been a marked abatement of the supply of milk recently, and there is little prospect that it will be made good this season. But, quoting the Review, "the increased demand for milk in its raw state to supply the wants of the large towns has rendered the sale of new milk a more profitable method of dairy farming than the making of butter or cheese." The general outlook for Australian butter is considered most favorable, and it is stated that already sales of New Zealand butter have been noted for October-March shipment at higher prices than ruled last season. The Canadian trade have every reason to look forward to successful operations, as a result of an increasing demand at excellent prices.

AUSTRALIAN FISH BUSINESS.

Australia's importations of fish preserved in tins last year was £288,571. The sources of supply were:

United Kingdom	£ 94,134
Canada	51,779
France	7,412
Norway	6,461
Portugal	5,774
United States	102,845

The Canadian trade last year was much larger than that of any year of the Commonwealth records. The United States was larger than any year except 1901. The importations from Great Britain have declined. New Zealand is furnishing an increasing amount of such food products and last year supplied £7,427. The trade with Portugal and Norway is also increasing. The Canadian shipments were almost wholly of salmon and it can be materially increased by the preservation of other fish, such as herring and mackerel, in the forms in which they are put up in Europe, says the Canadian commercial agent at Sydney. There is no larger possibility in Canada than its fisheries and the Dominion should become the world's principal source of fish food.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The cable line from Norway to Iceland which has been under construction for some time, is now completed. Correspondence between the two countries has become a necessity with the steadily increasing trade of the northern island.

SIMON SLANDER'S EXPERIENCES DOWN EAST

Specially Experienced for The Grocer.

It came as a distinct shock to my nerves when that important individual, the manager of The Canadian Grocer, leaned over my desk the other day and announced very affably that he would be charmed if I would contribute the prize essay on the Maritime Provinces to his Fall Special.

Now, to tell the honest truth, I had been dreading this announcement all along. You see, dear reader, it is one of the unwritten laws of the office that no special number of The Grocer can be published without a prize essay about the Maritime Provinces, which shall contain a sprinkling of those stereotyped expressions, "the far-famed Valley of the Metapedia," "the Garden of the Gulf," "the Land of Evangeline," etc., etc. Just about everybody round the office has had a try at the job, but so far I have escaped. Last Summer, however, I took a jaunt down east to see the sights and ever since I have felt it in my bones that I would be called on to record something about what I saw.

Before I begin allow me to explain that my mother's maiden name was Bessie Booster and that my father died while I was still an infant. These facts should make it quite evident even to the most thick-headed reader that by nature and up-bringing I am quite the reverse of what my name would indicate. This merely by the way, lest anyone seeing my name prefixed to this article should be deterred thereby from reading it. I might also add that in the office I am familiarly known as the "dog-fish reporter," though, believe me, this has nothing whatever to do with my appearance, manners or morals.

If you are beginning to grow impatient at my slowness in getting down to the provinces, just remember that it's not like going from Toronto to Hamilton or (excuse me) from Hamilton to Toronto. It takes quite a surprisingly long time. In fact, even that paragon, the "Ocean Limited," has to stay out all night to get there and it doesn't saunter round in the dark. The country is too skeery for a skittish young thing like that to dawdle in.

No, sir, the Ocean Limited goes at a mighty quick clip down along the south shore of the St. Lawrence, and about breakfast time you land in among some of the scenery that they talk about—the far-famed valley of the Metapedia.

The valley makes quite a pretty accompaniment for breakfast and I enjoyed it very much along with my fish, rolls, coffee, etc. The curves, of course, which lie thick along the bank of the river, make coffee-drinking somewhat risky, but by exercising a little caution you can estimate fairly well just when the lurch will come and get your cup out of harm's way in time. Otherwise the valley is fine.

After awhile you get clear of the valley and the curves and strike a long stretch of track, straight as an arrow for miles and miles. It reminded me of a roller-coaster, only without the twists and turns. The Limited would swoop down into a sort of valley, then up over a ridge; down again into a second valley and over a second ridge, and so on until after awhile you began to wonder when you would hit the bottom.

I was loath to leave the Limited at Moncton. The dining car especially was most attractive. Give me an I.C.R. diner for cheapness and quality. It's table d'hote from the olives to the finger bowl and decent Irish waiters; if they aren't Irish it's my mistake and they could certainly pass the imitation.

Of course I was disappointed when Friend Creighton looked up the time-table for the phenomenal Moncton bore and announced that he (or she) wasn't due until some time around midnight. The bore has been running on schedule for a good many years now and it's impossible to get the management to shift it. That's said to be the reason why certain distinguished people cut out the provinces from their itinerary, but of this I have my doubts. I know I shall go and try it again some day.

Going down to St. John in the evening, I was much impressed with the amount of suburban traffic that pours into that good city. The only difference between it and New York or Boston was that the people went into the city in the evening instead of coming out of it. I haven't yet lit on the reason for the phenomenon. At first I thought it was because the Sunday schools all had picnics that day. Then I concluded it might be a half-holiday. But neither surmise was correct so I simply concluded that the good people of St. John were fond of country air. And who could blame them when they are blessed with such a splendid river, navigable up to the provincial capital at Fredericton.

Having heard of the tremendous tides of the Bay of Fundy, I was prepared for a rough and tumble time of it when I took the ferry across to Digby. But the tides are only incidental and don't come tearing along like an express train or the Moncton bore. The only place I noticed that they were at all disagreeable was around the wharves, where they sometimes leave unpleasant things exposed when they recede.

Just out of St. John we slid past a big, sleepy-looking, top-heavy passenger steamer, making wearily for the port through the shifting fogs. Her passengers swarmed along the railings and waved madly at us. I suppose they took us for Esquimaux, ladies of the snows or other northern aborigines, even though they did hail from Boston.

After awhile we edged over to the Nova Scotian shore and presently ploughed into the bay, where Digby nestles against the hills. Digby is all right, and though I only stayed there about two hours, I made about twenty trips up and down the one-sided main street and thoroughly enjoyed myself. The place swarms with Americans, who are in for a good time and get it. There is a picturesque Summer hotel and free bus service to and from the station and wharf.

My departure from Digby took place soon after lunch on board that famous Nova Scotian institution, "The Flying Bluenose." To the ignorant let me say that this is the most picturesquely named limited express in America. What's your Empire State Express, your Imperial Limited, your Sunset Limited, or any of them to the Flying Bluenose? I am a student of railway trains and I know an aristocrat when I see it. The old Bluenose may be a trifle down in the knee, its cars may not all be of a pattern nor its engine a mogul, but what care I, it gets there just the same and travels on a limited schedule.

Yarmouth, where the Bluenose terminates its day's run, is an aristocratic old Nova Scotia town, living partially on the memory of the past and partially on the hope of the future, but living on the whole very much in the present. Whole-souled hospitality reigns within its limits and there is lots of leisure for a calm enjoyment of everyday blessings. There is also a two-car electric railway and plenty of fogs in season. The latter give plants, trees and foliage a fine complexion and make Yarmouth hedges famous. I could ask for no pleasanter place to spend a holiday than this same old seaport.

Indefatigable Mackenzie & Mann are building a road from Yarmouth to Halifax round by the south shore. Perhaps you won't believe it, but the young superintendent of the Yarmouth division hitched up two or three cars and an engine and took me (and a few more) down the road to Barrington deadhead. It was an ideal day, and nature, the engine driver and the passengers all smiled. Would I had the pen of a Castell Hopkins or a Rudyard Kipling to describe the scenery, but my one word is "perfection." Lakes spread out on all sides, and now and then would come a glimpse of the sea. Of inhabitants there were few. It was an ideal land for the hunter and the fisherman.

Fram Yarmouth I jumped back through Digby into the Annapolis Valley. This is another place they talk about. Not being enamoured of ancient history or legends or such things, I didn't inspect any ruins or look for footprints on the shores of Grand Pre or caves on Blomidon. I was much more interested in the orchards around Kentville, whither Friend De Wolfe drove me. The whole surface of the earth in that neighborhood grows apple trees and I wondered how it could stand the weight when the fruit all came to maturity.

Of Halifax, I treasure only one or two pleasant memories. The rest is a confusion of rainstorm, fog and cold in the head. Naturally, being a good British subject, I went up and did a turn around the fort. It looked pretty secure and the Tommies playing craps down in the moat, or whatever they call it, evidently considered themselves safe. Being Sunday, I visited the garrison church and got an attack of the shivers, a nervous affection that seizes me when I grow too patriotic. It was an inspiring sight to see the church-full of redcoats rise up and sing "Fight the Good Fight" and end up with "God Save the King." Even though the band did play "Won't you come home, Bill Baillie," as soon as the service was over, it didn't seem very out of place.

Sydney, whither I journeyed next, was wrapped in rain and fog during my entire sojourn. Given a little sunshine and I could imagine it a pleasant place, but in my memory it still wears a black eye.

Old Sol peeped forth again just as we were tearing down that magnificent stretch of track alongside the Bras d'Or Lakes. It shone on one of the finest landscapes it has ever been my good fortune to behold, and under its soothing influence I began to recover my spirits. By the time Pictou was reached in the evening I could look on the world once again with a tranquil vision.

Pictou is another ancient burg that appealed strongly to me. With its odd, narrow main street, its fort and its wharves it made quite a picture. From there I crossed to Charlottetown one charming evening and got my first glimpse of the island of the gulf. I have heard people rave about Prince Edward Island and I thought they were silly. But then I was ignorant. Now I know better and I rave, too, when I get the chance.

It's hard to say just what there is about the island that attracts one. It's flat and that is enough to spoil any place. But there's an indefinable something in the air—a sort of Midas touch—that makes everything glorious.

After getting through with the island, I made tracks for home. Too much holidaying isn't good for anyone and in my three weeks' visit I had drunk in enough inspiration to last me a twelvemonth. If my story is a scrappy one, I am sorry, but as I said before, my specialty isn't scenery, but dog-fish.

HERE AND THERE WITH THE TRADE

Happenings Among Foodstuff Dealers From the Atlantic to The Pacific—News of Your Brother Grocer in all the Provinces.

H. Brittain, Yonge street, Toronto, has sold his grocery business to R. E. Stroud.

W. F. Morley, of the Canada Brokerage Company, Toronto, was in Montreal last week.

E. P. Baughner, Talbotville, has purchased the grocery business of Mrs. J. Oxford & Son.

J. T. Cuddy, sales manager of the Montreal Packing Company, has been confined to his bed lately by illness.

H. R. Kemp, traveler for the McCormick Manufacturing Co., is ill with typhoid fever in Victoria Hospital, London.

G. H. Macfarlane, assistant general manager E. W. Gillett Co., Limited, Toronto, was in Montreal early part of this week.

Walter C. Elliott, representing E. W. Gillett Co., Limited, was a caller at the Montreal offices of The Grocer last Saturday.

J. F. Brownscomb, general merchant, Uxbridge, has opened a branch in New Liskeard and is doing a big business in the New Ontario town.

A. Atcheson, Deer Lake, was in Toronto last week with his family. One of his little girls had to undergo an operation for throat trouble.

John Swan, Vasey, general merchant, has built a chopping mill and will make it a department of his business. He will begin by operating the mill two days a week.

R. L Corlett, of Williamsford, who has purchased the general store business of the late Hugh Wilson at Cannington, expects to take possession on the 1st of November.

Ewing & Reid, of Alliston, a progressive and energetic produce firm, have bought the grocery and flour and feed business of W. Jenkins. Mr. Jenkins has been forced to retire because of ill health.

A. Wood, Kerwood, has been conducting his general store business for six months and is building up a very nice trade. He is one of the leading men of Kirkwood and the business with him is increasing rapidly.

Mrs. Kent, daughter of B. A. Belyea, Southampton, died very suddenly the week before last. Mrs. G. Kent was in the millinery business and was very popular. Much sympathy is felt for her family and friends.

J. B. Renaud & Co., Quebec, some time ago added a wholesale grocery department to their extensive flour and feed business and have considerably enlarged their premises by taking the neighboring building and warehouses at the rear. The interior has been rearranged and up-to-date office facilities installed.

W. J. Carruthers, who gave up teaching and purchased the general store business of Wm. Cochrane, at Baltimore about a month ago, is doing very well indeed. Mr. Cochrane has opened a general store in Burnley, not many miles distant and he, too, reports trade very satisfactory.

Wiggins & Gray, grocery and crockery merchants, Marmora, have made considerable improvements to their store. A new hardwood floor has been put in, some handsome new fixtures installed and a general clean up was effected. Altogether the firm is keeping well up with the game. They are doing a fine business and it is increasing.

The trustees of the estate of the late Hugh Wilson, of Cannington, are erecting in that town a very handsome bank building for the Standard Bank. It is a building that would do credit to Toronto and will be an ornament to the town of Cannington. It is situated on the corner opposite the general store recently purchased by R. L. Corlett.

NESTOR OF TORONTO GROCERS

Henry Swan has Been in Business in the Same Stand Forty-Three Years—Memories of Early Toronto Before the Days of Package Groceries.

Forty-three years ago on Oct. 4, Henry Swan opened the doors of the store at 162 King street east, Toronto, where he to-day conducts one of the largest and finest grocery businesses in Canada. The store is twice as deep and three times as wide as when he started, making it six times as large.

Mr. Swan is a Scot, born in Edinburgh and 65 years of age. He learned the grocery business as an apprentice with Dodgson, Shields & Morton, for many years the leading grocers in Toronto. But that was not his first contact with the grocery trade. At the age of eleven he was employed by R. Taylor, who occupied the corner of three stores at Yonge and Albert streets.

"I come passed there every day," said Mr. Swan to The Canadian Grocer representative, "and I see that block as it was then."

The adjoining building was the Franklin House, kept by Rebel John Montgomery, of whom Mr. Swan has a vivid recollection. Past a lane entering the hotel yard was a vacant lot where a little later two small shops were erected. Next south were five little one-storey stores. Adjoining them was the large barn of the Fulljames Hotel and the hotel on the corner. All the block was built of wood.

Rebel John.

Rebel John, as the historical hotelkeeper was named, was a large man. Very early one morning Mr. Swan, then a mere lad, was sweeping the sidewalk in front of the grocery. Rebel John, hands in breeches pockets, was walking up and down and remarked in his deep bass voice:

"I do like to see little boys up early in the morning."

That was long before the era of package groceries. Sardines, mustard, corn starch and matches were about the only goods in ready-to-sell form.

"I remember when canned salmon came on the market," said Mr. Swan. "A lady came in and asked for salmon in tins. We hadn't it and I was sent out to Bilton's to get it. Mr. Bilton said, 'I sell it for 50c. I'll give it to you for three York shillings.' That was the price for a pound tin."

"There is not now in the wholesale or retail grocery business in Toronto a man who was in it when I started here." Mr. Swan said. "Mr. Ince was the last. Between the Don and Yonge street, I don't know of one remaining in any line of business."

One of the most interesting features of the Swan business is the changes it has experienced. It has completely changed in its character twice, giving it three distinct phases. Nothing could more surely indicate the business capacity, resourcefulness and perseverance of the firm than this ability to adapt themselves rapidly to changed conditions and so save their trade from what otherwise meant failure.

A few months after starting the business, Mr Swan was joined by his brother, Robert, and the store sign is still "Swan Bros." They established themselves in the farmers' trade to such an extent that it comprised 90 per cent. of their turnover. At that time Toronto was the market for the whole central portion of the province. The farmers would come in twice a year for supplies and Swan Bros. had a great many customers from the Townships of Brock, Melanthon, Adjola, and others equally distant. One of their customers lived at Southampton on Lake Huron and drove in regularly.

What the Railways Did.

Railway development took this trade from Toronto. The opening of the Wellington, Grey & Bruce, the Northern, the Midland, and other lines made it unnecessary for the farmers to come to the city. Swan Bros. had to look for other custom. They must acquire a city trade. Their store was then in the heart of the business district and the best residential districts of the city were within a stone's throw. They laid themselves out to secure a share of this high-class trade and did it. From the semi-jobbing trade of the farmers, who, when laying in half-yearly supplies, could not buy in small quantities, this was a radical change. In addition to a change of method it meant a change of goods. There had been no call by the farmers for the fancy groceries required in a well-to-do city trade. Even staple goods had to be fancy in quality.

The firm's success on this practically new adventure had not been many years established when another change overtook them. Their customers began to move away. The old residential sections had gradually become undesirable and better-to-do people moved away. The problem before the firm was to hold their trade. They did it by going after it. They adopted the plan of calling for orders. That was before the telephone had come to their aid. Now the called-for and telephone trade constitute a very considerable part of their business. Some days they receive as many as 300 telephone orders, which in a ten-hour day would be an order every two minutes.

Good Goods.

"To what do you attribute your success?" Mr. Swan was asked.

"Giving the very best goods that could be got. If I learned of any better goods than we had I went after them. That has been my hobby all my life—to get the best. The poor trade selling a poor class of goods, any body can get that. It is a great mistake for a grocer to go in for cheap goods. The only time a customer is pleased with cheap goods is when he is paying for them, and never after."

The Grocer representative wanted Mr. Swan to speak of the building up of a grocery trade.

"It's hard to explain," he replied, "how trade is got and kept, but next to fair dealing the most important thing is to get rid of everything in the shape of second-class goods and keeping only the best."

As might easily be imagined, Swan Bros. do a very large credit business. Many of their customers seldom or never see the store.

"Cash or credit trade," Mr. Swan said, in reply to a question, "is a good deal as a person cultivates it. One person prefers a cash trade and another would not have it; one makes a success of cash trade, and would lose all he had with credit. What suits one may not suit another at all. It is largely a matter of temperament. Our losses have not been sufficient to make me think we would have preferred a cash trade."

It must not be inferred from this that the firm eschew cash. The writer knows from experience that they accept it with great readiness.

A Hard Worker.

Mr. Swan sticks more closely to business than many men half his years and with a good deal less than half the excuse he has. He presides at the cash desk, but serves as readily behind the counter with the clerks, or answers the telephone if he happens to be nearest to it. A quiet man, given to dry humor and an occasional illustrative story. But the intent of his mind is serious. He is Scotch; he is Presbyterian with the philosophic tendencies the two engender.

The writer asked him to say something about the elements that make for success in business.

"I've thought for years," he replied, "about why one man succeeds and another fails and I've come to the conclusion that I can't tell. It's in the man, his temperament, his methods, his personality."

But when asked why a certain man with long experience would not be a success in business for himself, he replied, "He would not be able to master the multifarious details of a business."

Senator Jaffray, who has been a business and political friend of Mr. Swan many years, said of him to the writer, "He is a hard-working, industrious and level-headed business man. He stuck more closely to the counter than did his brother Robert. I don't know of him taking much interest in anything but his family and his business. He is a man of unswerving integrity and keen business insight."

Rev. J. A. Macdonald, managing editor of the Globe, speaking of Mr. Swan not as a friend but as expressing the community view, said: "Henry Swan is one of the men whose life and work give strength and stability to the business community. Without fireworks or drumbeating he has built up a substantial business house with excellent connections and about either his personal integrity or his commercial stability no questions are ever asked. He is one of those who believe in honesty not because it pays but because it is right, and after all that is the type of man that gives strength and stability to the business community."

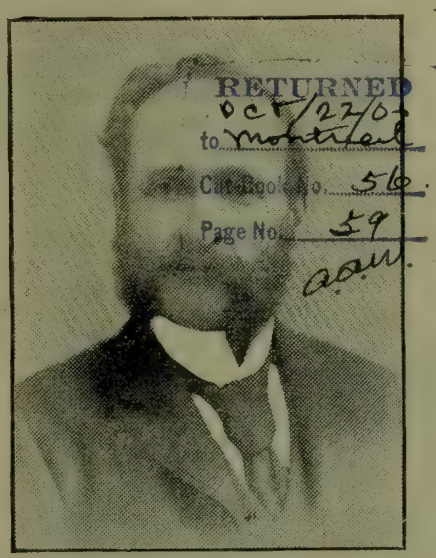
DEATH OF WM. STRACHAN.

Prominent Business Man in Montreal Died After a Short Illness.

William Strachan, one of the most prominent business men in Montreal, died early last Friday morning. Mr. Strachan had only been ill about one month, and was thought to be on the road to recovery, when he suffered a relapse and passed away in the fifty-eighth year of his age.

Born in Ormstown in 1848, the late Mr. Strachan came to Montreal when he was but fifteen years of age. Entering the employ of the Canadian Express Co. he remained with them for ten years, when he went into soap manufacturing. He acquired the soap factory from the William Christie estate, which had been carried on under the supervision of William Christie for years. His business ability soon built up a large connection, and he began to branch out in other directions. From the City of Montreal he and C. M. Acer purchased the Union abattoir, which they ran successfully until it was taken over by the D. B. Martin Co. Later, he organized the Montreal Stock Yards & Abattoir Co., of which he was president and managing director at the time of his death.

President of the Union Cold Storage Co., and vice-president of the Edwardsburg Starch Co., Mr. Strachan was also a director in several other concerns, the Herald Publishing Co., the Union Brewery, the Montreal Sand & Gravel Co., and the Manufacturers' Life Insurance Co.



The Late William Strachan.

As a member of several clubs Mr. Strachan was favorably known in social circles, and had many sincere friends.

A wife, six sons and a daughter survive him. The sons are: W. C., manager of the William Strachan Co.; W. B., broker; H. G., ranching in Alberta; E. D., Bank of Toronto; K. G., of the Lake of the Woods Milling Co., and H. D., Bank of Ottawa.

PROGRESSIVE SOAP CO.

In January, 1905, the Guelph Soap Co., of Guelph, was taken over by J. C. Walker & Son, and the business has been a decided success ever since, it having increased to such an extent that plans are now under way for a new addition to their factory. Their leading lines are "Welcome" cake soap and "Royal City" and "Peerless" bar soaps. They also put up the well-known Crystal soap chips. This company have been carrying on an aggressive advertising campaign throughout Canada with splendid results. They give no premiums, but invest the money that otherwise would be spent in premiums in the making of a first-class soap. If progressiveness, backed up by a first-class article, count for anything in business, continued success of the Guelph Soap Co. is assured.

COMBINATION OF DIFFICULTIES.

Dried Fruit Situation in California.

The dried fruit situation in California is a curious combination of difficulties arising out of the destruction of San Francisco. W. G. A. Lambe & Co., Toronto, have received from a large California firm a letter which says:

"The full force of the terrible disaster that overtook this city and state on the 18th day of April is just becoming apparent. The business section of San Francisco was destroyed. There has been for a number of years a shortage of labor in this state. This you will recall if you will go back over the experience we have had during former years. The tremendous demand for labor of all kinds as a result of our disaster, coupled with the fact that a very large number of people left this state immediately after the 18th day of April, and further the very high basis of wages being paid in this city, has turned almost all of the help that we have always used in the country districts to the city, and still the city is short of help. There is not a piece of work being done in this state at this time of any kind or character for which there is sufficient help."

The writers explain the shortage in lumber, the car blockade and the shortage of labels and cartons owing to the destruction of all lithographing plates, and conclude:

"The three vital forces in making shipments are labor, packing material, including labels and cartons, and cars. The shortage of any one of these is bad enough, but this year we have a shortage of all three lines to contend with. There is never a quiet moment with us.

"Everyone in the business is up against the same proposition. We are all anxious to get our shipments made, as it is impossible to get sufficient insurance to cover the stocks of goods we are compelled to carry at this time, owing to the failure and withdrawal from this state of a very large number of insurance companies, and of the inability of the balance to take all the business offered them."

RUSH READY FOR G.T.P. END

Big General Store Enterprise for Prince Rupert, the New Pacific Terminal—Great Fair Planned for Vancouver in 1910

Vancouver, B.C., Oct. 11, 1906.

All the eastern cousins will have the opportunity of visiting the lusty young province of the Pacific Slopes, in 1910, if the plans of the Vancouver Hundred Thousand Club materialize along lines now outlined. It is seriously proposed by that energetic body of westerners to have a big exposition in the Terminal City in 1910, to be called an Occidental-Oriental Exhibition. The club has discussed the matter preliminarily, and will make public later its decision as to taking charge of the organization of such a big proposition. The idea is suggested in the name, to have the products of the Orient and those of the western countries also gathered in exhibition in this city, on lines to be worked out later. Questions of ways and means are to be considered first, and an interesting report is to be anticipated. The advantages to the young city of the western commerce of the Canadian nation are palpable.

Practically the first commercial venture to be announced for the new up-coast city, the terminus of the G.T.P., is that in which Robert Kelly, of Kelly, Douglas & Co., wholesale grocers, is associated with the United Supply & Contracting Co., of Montreal, of which Jas. Carruthers is president. By Feb. 1 next it is the intention of the new concern to have an immense general store opened at Prince Rupert, as the coming port is already named. The stock will be shipped north by Messrs. Kelly, Douglas & Co. This movement, taken as it is to be the action of men in close touch with inside information re G.T.P. matters, indicates the expectation of an early and big rush to the new city. In the same connection it is announced definitely by the president that there will be no present chance to speculate in Prince Rupert town lots, for there is no survey yet. Still there are hundreds awaiting first news to move north.

Industries are beginning to locate in New Westminster, attracted no doubt by superior water and rail facilities, combined with comparatively cheap building sites and lower rates of taxes. The latest is a soap factory, which is to be built by an eastern capitalist who visited the Royal City during the fair a week ago. He announced his intention of securing a site at once, and it is expected that a further announcement will be made at any time.

The announced intention of certain parties to start a glass works in the old Royal City will also be recalled. That deal is still pending, and if certain negotiations come to a successful conclusion, as now anticipated, that industry, too, will be added to the list.

British Columbia purchases large quantities of salt in the Old Country because of cheap transportation by sailing vessel from Liverpool, the home of the salt industry. Recently the non-arrival of the British ship Fingal, which is bringing 1,200 tons for the local market, has been causing a shortage of the commodity required for fish salting purposes. The Fingal, a sailing vessel, was reported delayed owing to bad weather en route.

Though not yet advanced on local markets, flour is considered as very likely to be raised sharply in the coming weeks. There has been a good deal of activity displayed by jobbers in buying up stocks recently, on the strength of the outlook for advanced prices, as indicated by eastern movement. Of course the bulk of the flour used being imported from the mills of the Northwest, the price is practically governed from that direction.

Local business conditions are very bright. The New Westminster Fair last week brought in many up-country and out-of-town dealers, and these had, of course, the usual contingent of buying to do at the wholesale houses before going home. Prices of staple commodities do not show any sharp change, and in the ordinary lines of produce, etc., the stocks and prices are normal.

In produce there is preparation for Thanksgiving. A number of turkeys from local sources will be marketed and a limited stock is coming forward from the east in cold storage. The price is said to be expected to range at 25c. per lb., though dealers who profess to be posted predict that later on the price of dressed birds for Christmas will be much less.

Butter is very scarce, and price is firm at last raise, which made it 30c. from local creameries to the wholesale trade, 35c. to the retailer, and 40c. to the consumer. Eggs of strictly fresh local vintage will now bring 45c. per doz. readily. Fresh candled stock will bring 27c. to 30c.

In fruit the supply of choice apples increases. Many are being sent down from the interior. The crop is not so extra heavy, but is being got out in good shape and forwarded quickly. The interior apples are, as a rule, not forwarded so early in the season. Some of the varieties favorite now are 20-ounce pippin, Wealthy, Alexander, Jonathan, Wolf River, etc. Prices range from 80c. to $1.50 to the trade.

Pears of late Fall and Winter varieties are being marketed, though the crop is not large. Prices are $1 to $1.50 per crate. Plums and peaches are off the market. Crab apples at $1 the 40-lb. box are still offering, the chief variety being the red Siberian. Tomatoes sell at $1 to $1.25 per crate. At Kelowna and other Okanagan points they were being offered at as low as 50c. the 20-lb. crate, and no takers. Oranges, late Valencias, are bringing $5.50. Lemons, $7 per crate.

In vegetables, potatoes remain firm round $15 per ton for local lower mainland stock, with higher for interior-grown stock. Shipments to the north are over, while on the Aorangi to-day some consignments go to Australia.

NOVA SCOTIA HEARTY.

Crops Good and the Outlook Bright—Many Tourists.

"I tell you the Halifax Board of Trade is now a credit," writes W. G. DeWolfe, of Kentville, "and has done splendid work the past year." Mr. DeWolfe is an enthusiastic and energetic board-of-trader. He has long been impressed with the possibilities for good work by boards of trade throughout Canada.

The Nova Scotia apple crop, Mr. DeWolfe states, is a good average and there will be 325,000 barrels for export. Many English buyers are now in the province.

"Nova Scotia," says Mr. DeWolfe, "is in good heart; lack of help the only drawback. Farmers look cheerful and all crops are a good average."

The tourist trade in the province was heavier last Summer than ever before.

WESTERN TRADE GROWING.

"The largest business in the history of the firm, and growing rapidly both locally and in Western Canada." The speaker was F. J. Smye, who some few months ago became senior member of the old established firm of Balfour & Co., now Balfour, Smye & Co.

Mr. Smye was delighted with the progress made by the firm and particularly with the growing popularity of Tartan Brand goods, a subject that never fails to arouse Mr. Smye to enthusiasm. In fact he is never happier than when expatiating on the virtues of Tartan goods.

"Just let me show you a few orders," he remarked, stepping over to the desk where a fat pile of carload orders were stacked.

Mr. St. Clair Balfour is returning in a few days from his trip west, begun in June. The trip has been a successful one judging from the orders above mentioned. He reports that Tartan Brand is gaining great favor in the west.

Mr. Smye also reports a large shipment of Tartan Brand canned fruits and vegetables to the West Indies to a customer secured through their advertisement in The Canadian Grocer. Glasg and London have also taken large quantities of Tartan gallon apples recently. "The chief difficulty experienced," concluded the head of the firm, "is in securing sufficient quantity of these goods from our factory at Grimsby. The demand from the west keeps us hustling."

Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Waddington, of Snellgrove-Waddington Co., Fort William, have returned to their home after a two weeks visit in Hamilton, where they were the guests of F. J. Smye, of Balfour, Smye & Co.

LONDON TRADE HAPPENINGS

Very Satisfactory Situation—Retail Grocers' Association Doing Good Work—Has a Large Cash Balance—Canned Goods—Dried Fruit Buying Light.

Never in the history of the grocery business in London was there such harmony among the dealers. The Retail Grocers' Association is in a flourishing condition and are working together to the interests of all. The result is that there are no useless price wars and everybody is getting good prices. The association was started about a year ago without a cent. To-day they have several hundred dollars to the good and have been able to provide a couple of good picnics that made the grocers talked about.

Business among the retail men has been very good. They have good reason for thanksgiving. London has been more prosperous than ever in its history and with nobody out of work it is not hard making collections. The difficulty in building trades this Summer has been to get labor and the result is that men have been making good money. The grocer gets his share of it, and what adds to the assurance of good business conditions is the absence from strikes that London enjoys.

There are few grocery changes here, as those in the business continue in it. The only change in recent weeks was one completed last week by which the grocery and butcher business of T. G. Siddle, Maitland and St. James streets, was purchased by Frank Farnsworth. It is said that another grocery will likely start in the east end where the Sovereign Bank is busily engaged constructing a fine new building with store space at the corner of Dundas and Adelaide streets.

The only drawback to business at the present time is the high prices of dried fruits and canned goods. The high prices of raisins and currants of course will affect the demand for peels and such composite parts of the Christmas luxuries. The wholesale men claim, however, that though the market is affected just now the demand will come with a rush before long. At the same time the retail grocers feel the squeezing process and are buying lightly and fear that it will hurt the business. The same is true of canned goods. In this district there has not been such a large crop of tomatoes or of corn in ten years, and in ten years prices of these goods canned have not been as high. The northwest trade seems to bolster up prices to the maximum mark.

In both these lines the wholesale trade is affected and purchases are small comparatively. However, in every other line the wholesale trade is most healthy. During September the country grocers were slow in payments owing, they claimed, to the farmers not putting their money into circulation. But for the first half of this month collections were never better.

The canning business in the districts of Western Ontario is booming and several new factories have been started this Summer. Those at Alvinston, Thamesford and other places report big business. But the new factory here, though now employing 125 people and turning out large quantities for which it is said they have orders ahead, are said to have lost money on the opening. It is said they had contracted for tomatoes in great quantities and when the time came for canning the manufacturers of the tins had not been able to deliver their goods and hundreds of bushels went to waste. But the prospects are now the finest, the entire output for the present being sold in the west.

J. W. Weegar, of Maxville, and a buyer for several Montreal produce firms, was in Montreal last week.

ESSEX FOR CORN AND TOMATOES.

Believes Itself to be the Banner County of Ontario.

There is not the slightest doubt in the minds of the people there that Essex County, the most southerly portion of the Dominion of Canada, is the banner county for growing corn and tomatoes.

The cut showing the delivery of tomatoes to the Essex Canning & Tomato Co. at their factory in the town of Essex, will give one an idea of the extent of this industry and what it means to the farmers and market gardeners to have a large canning factory situated in their midst.

On the day (Sept. 28) that the photo for this cut was taken, the roadway was lined with delivery wagons, as shown, steadily from noon to 7.30 in the evening, varying in numbers from 15 to 25 at a time, waiting their turn to drive on the scales.

We understand that this company have had even larger deliveries of tomatoes since the date mentioned, on Friday last, Oct. 5, over 90 tons (3,000 bushel) were received.

Delivering Tomatoes at the Essex Canning Factory.

The Essex Canning & Preserving Co's factory is one of the largest in the province, the cut shows only a portion of their works, the main building is 240 feet long by 40 feet wide, three storeys high, (this does not include the wings, additions and adjacent buildings connected therewith) and is equipped with all the latest automatic mechinery and every provision made for packing the goods under the most approved, sanitary arrangement.

WITH THE TRADE AT OTTAWA

Association Establishes a Credit and Collecting Department—It is Carefully Planned—Schedule of Social Seances for the Season—Early Closing By-law—Notes.

It is generally reported that the grocery trade during the past week was hardly as brisk as usual, although very satisfactory for the season of the year. A good business is being done in provisions; housekeepers are buying supplies of flour, potatoes, etc., for Winter use, while apples are commencing to be bought by the barrel. Such trade helps sales considerably.

On the local market prices of produce tend upwards. Butter is selling at 30c. for creamery and dairy prints, while solids retail at 28c. for creamery and 25c. to 27c. for dairy. Wholesale quotations range from 24c. to 26c.

On the Ottawa Cheese Board Friday last 1,576 cheese were offered, consisting of 895 white and 681 colored. Prices reached 12 5-8 and 12 11-16 cents, but no sales were made, sellers refusing that figure. It was reported that about half the offering was disposed of on the curb at 12 11-16.

At the fruit exchange small fruits continue to be very scarce. Grapes, which should be plentiful, are almost nil, consequently prices are the limit, 23½c. to 25c. for Concords, 6 quarts, and 35c. to 40c. for Rogers, 6 quarts. Quinces and Seckle pears bring 40c. to 60c., pears in barrels $4 to $5.75, according to quality. Apples—Snows, No. 1, $3.50 to $4; No. 2, $2.50 to $3; other varieties from $2.75 to $3.50 for No. 1, and $2.25 to $2.75 for No. 2. Cranberries, $7.50 to $9. Grape fruit, $4 to $5.50. Oranges, Floridas, $3.75 to $4.25. Lemons, $5.75 to $6.50. Sweet potatoes, $2.50 to $3 a barrel.

The Retail Grocers' Association met on Wednesday last with a good attendance of members. President Forde occupied the chair. The committee who have been working for some months past forming a credit and collecting department in connection with the association made their final report. They have worked out a plan that should be of immense benefit to the association, and as all the stationery required is given gratis to paid-up members providing they take an interest in sending information through the proper channels of this department, it is presumed that a greater interest than ever will be taken in the local association. It may be said that all information is taken care of in a private manner and as the committee have dealt very carefully with this matter and had expert opinion on their work no merchant need hesitate in taking advantage of the benefits of this department of the grocers' association.

The executive committee reported having arranged a plan of entertainment for the social meetings of the association on the fourth Wednesday of each month, as follows:

October—An open meeting to retail grocers. Programme and refreshments.

November—Lecture on business methods by an expert accountant.

December—No meeting.

January—Euchre party.

February—Debate, "Cash vs. Credit."

March—Banquet.

April—Reception by newly elected officers.

The early closing question, which was adopted at last meeting asking the city council to pass a by-law closing all grocery stores at 6 p.m. on ordinary nights and 9 p.m. on Saturdays during the year, was brought up under the head of unfinished business. It was found that the petitions out were being fairly well signed and prospects were very good towards getting sufficient signatures. The president with Messrs. Atkinson and Lamoureux were appointed to look after the lists and make a special effort towards having them sufficiently signed and returned before next meeting.

Mr. Blakeslee, of the Egg-O-See Company, was present and gave a very able address on the benefits of organization. He explained the workings of the grocers' association in parts of the United States. His remarks proved of great interest to the members.

A resolution of condolence was passed on behalf of H. N. Bate, of H. N. Bate & Sons, who was bereaved of his wife a few days ago.

C. J. Provost, treasurer of the O. R. G. A., is away on a hunting trip.

John Wilson, city traveler of H. N. Bate & Sons, was in New York for a two weeks holiday. He says 'tis quite a village.

Mr. Stewart, H. J. Heinz's representative, is in the city looking for Fall and Winter orders.

PROGRESSIVE BOLTON MILLER.

A. A. McFall has Up-to-Date Mill and Methods.

A. A. McFall, proprietor of the Bolton flour mill, is one of the most enterprising young millers in Ontario. His mills are equipped with the latest improved machinery and supplied with water-power, which is available for all purposes. The reliability and excellence of its products are acknowledged all over the country; one of the least evidences of their popularity being the phenomenal increase in consumptive demand during the last few years. The principal brands of flour manufactured by the Bolton mill are: "Pure Gold," "Albion's Pride," and "Good Loaf." It also turns out large quantities of Graham flour, cracked wheat, wheat germ, etc. Mr. McFall combines with his milling business an extensive trade in grain and feed.

WEEKLY SOCIALS.

Toronto Grocers will Make an effort to Stir Things Up.

The Toronto Retail Grocers' Association met on Monday night in the Temple Building and decided to hold a social evening for the members and their friends each Monday night during the Winter season. Grocery travelers will be welcome at all these meetings. They will be held in the association's room in the Temple Building. It is thought by this means that greater interest in the association can be aroused.

MODERN ACCOUNT KEEPING.

The loose-leaf system of bookkeeping has come to stay, not only with the large wholesale firms but with the retailers generally. In fact the retailer has the greater necessity to keep track of the many small leaks to which the grocery business is so susceptible. The advertisement of the chief manufacturers of these modern systems will be found on pages 175 to 179, and on page 194.

Markets and Market Notes

QUEBEC MARKETS.

POINTERS—
Fish—Revised.
Evaporated Apples—Advanced ½c.
Citron Peel—Advanced 1c.

Montreal, October 17, 1906.

On all sides in the grocery trade there is complaint because of the shortage of cars. The wheat movement in the west has practically tied up the railway companies so far as the obtaining of cars is concerned. But for this jobbers are satisfied with the trend of events in groceries. The action of the Bank of Montreal in taking over the Ontario Bank has caused many a sigh of thankfulness, since many had dealings with that now defunct institution. In canned goods the shortage of strawberries is the feature of the market. This means an acute situation because confectioners and others who require the fruit will not be able to obtain supplies. Grocers, of course, will suffer also in this respect. The tomato pack is now finished but the percentage has not yet been made public. There has been no change in sugar since last report. The market is about steady. No change in prices is expected in the near future. Active trade in molasses and syrups has not yet commenced. Tapioca futures are a little weaker this week. In teas there are no Japans to be had in first hands, while the supply in second hands is also limited. In foreign dried fruits currants are slightly higher, but the price has not been materially affected. There has been no improvement in the situation in California, and packers are working under the most adverse conditions. There is nothing new in coffees and spices. Evaporated apples are ½c. higher this week. An advance has occurred in citron peel also.

CANNED GOODS—According to advices which have reached Montreal, the tomato pack is now finished, but the percentage has not yet been given out. In some quarters it is said that the pack was about 65 per cent. Another rumor is to the effect that 75 per cent. deliveries will be made. Jobbers say that business is coming in as usual at this time of year. Strawberries are not obtainable, and according to one house there is no chance of full deliveries being made. A prominent jobber said that he had been offered over 50c. per case bonus for strawberries which the packers were not in a position to deliver him. This would indicate the extreme scarcity of the fruit.

TEA—Practically speaking, there are absolutely no Japans in first hands and what is held in second hands is very small indeed. Anybody possessing medium or fine or medium Japans, finds it comparatively easy to obtain full price. China greens now offered are of better value than those which have been on the market lately. In Ceylon greens there are no Young Hysons to be had. This tea seems to be particularly scarce, even in second hands. Dealers say that it is difficult to have orders filled in the primary market. Other teas show little change since last week.

FOREIGN DRIED FRUITS. — There is very little that is new in the dried fruit situation. The first direct steamer, S.S. Bellona, from Denia, is now due, and several large consignments for Montreal are on board. Before this is unloaded there will be very little new fruit offering in Montreal. There are some small parcels of raisins and currants which have arrived via Liverpool, but outside of these there is nothing new but a few figs which are now on the market over two weeks. Currants are up ½c., but prices are not materially affected. The situation in Californian goods presents no new features this week. There are rumors of an all round advance in raisins, but nothing has yet been heard from any of the large coast houses to this effect. In their circular of October 13, A. P. Tippet & Co. explain the situation as follows :

The earthquake in April last is practically responsible for the whole trouble.

First—Because it destroyed all the lithographing plants, and all the dies and plates.

Second—Because it created a most abnormal demand for wood of every kind with naturally exorbitant prices, and box makers are "laying down" on their contracts.

Third—Because re-building has absorbed all the available labor, the consequence is that every packer finds himself poorly furnished with boxes, labels and labor. Added to this, the demand this season for fruit has been an exceptionally large one, while the worst car shortage ever known in the history of the business exists, and as if this was not enough, one of Griffin's packing houses, full of raisins, was destroyed by fire last week.

SPICES—The tone of the spice market is firm. Reports from jobbers are to the effect that trade is in good condition, due partly to the opening up of Fall business in earnest. Prices are unchanged locally and advices from the primary markets do not reveal anything unusual there.

RICE AND TAPIOCA—In tapioca the feature of the market is the slight weakness in futures. Late futures are accepted at figures ½c. below late prices. Spot stocks are exceedingly small, not being nearly enough to go round. Rice is normal.

EVAPORATED APPLES—There has been an advance of half a cent in evaporated apples, due partly to the recent snow and frost in the western part of Ontario. Dealers are now quoting 7½c. to 8c.

HONEY—There has been no relief in the honey situation. The scarcity continues and those who have booked orders do not know where to turn to obtain the goods to fill them. Prices are steady.

MAPLE PRODUCTS — Interest in maple products is becoming greater as the season for holiday buying advances. Manufacturers are making deliveries to the jobbers and throughout the trade there is considerable activity in this line.

GREEN FRUITS—In fruits there is considerable business passing. There have been many changes in prices since last week, but there is nothing of particular note going on in this market. There is a good demand for bananas, which are scarce in New York. As a rule there is a surplus at this time and low prices rule, but this year the situation is quite the reverse. The recent snow and frost in the Niagara district has had an effect on the market. The Grocer was shown one letter from a grocer in that district. According to his report every orchard in that district was practically ruined, while he himself lost at least $5,000. Wine grapes are high. Pineapples are also hard to obtain. Valencia oranges are slightly lower, but lemons are up.

MONTHLY COMPETITION.

Window dressing, we believe, is one of the most important parts of the grocery business. It needs encouragement in Canada. For that reason The Canadian Grocer has decided to hold a monthly window dressing competition. Three prizes of $5, $3 and $2 will be awarded each month. Those wishing to enter the competition will send photographs of their windows to THE CANADIAN GROCER, 10 Front St. East, Toronto. accompanied by a written description.

This is practically a chance for the clerk. An illustration of this is shown in the case of J. M. Thom, of Gibbons Bros., Toronto, referred to in another column. No department of the grocery trade offers larger opportunities for advancement than window dressing. If you don't know what you can do, try. If you don't surprise yourself the effort will be a great advantage in any case. No grocer is up to his business if he cannot dress a window. Get into the competition.

VEGETABLES—Fair to good trade is being done in vegetables at present. Potatoes are interesting. There are a great many lots offering, but they are such that they will not keep any length of time, and consequently are sold for whatever price they will bring, sometimes as low as 65c. Cucumbers are now quoted at $2 a dozen, imported stock. Wax and green beans are selling at $3 a basket. Tomatoes are not so plentiful, while carrots have been advanced. FISH—Trade is reported fair in all kinds of fish and oysters. In fresh fish, owing to the stormy weather which has prevailed recently, all kinds are scarce. Cod and haddock are high in price, while there is no fresh halibut obtainable. Frozen stock is offered but it is high. New kippers and bloaters are arriving daily, and this is the feature of the smoked fish market. Stocks of haddies are not so plentiful. In salt fish olines, herrings, are in good supply. Prices on new green cod are firm, which are arriving freely. New B. C. salmon is not yet offered. Oysters are offered this week from $6 to $9.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Rather easier and quiet.

Dried Fruits—The feature.

Provision Markets—Steady.

Lard—Higher.

Toronto, Oct. 17, 1906.

General business is reported brisk on all sides and collections are satisfactory. Sugar consumption has subsided and the tone of the market is slightly easier. Dried fruits are the feature of the business. Currants are getting more attention because of the scarcity of Valencias, but California seeded are the principal beneficiary. California apricots and peaches are practically excluded from this market because of the price. Apricots at 30 to 33c. a lb. would not be very attractive to the ordinary Canadian consumer. Spices are all firm, but no recent news of moment has reached this market.

CANNED GOODS — The output is normal. New prices are given this week on Red Kidney and Lima beans, pumpkins and squash. Some wholesalers are already sold up to their limit on Fraser River sockeye and prices are not advanced.

SUGAR—Interest in the staple has subsided with the consumptive demand and the market has taken an easier turn. The raw market has been fluctuating some, but on the whole remains steady. In New York on Friday, however, the price of standard granulated was reduced from $4.90 to $4.80, with 1 per cent. off and there was some shading under that. Wednesday of last week European beet was quoted, f.o.b. Hamburg, ½d above the previous day at 9s. 4½d, and that price was firmly established. That was equal to 3.96c. duty paid for 96 degrees test centrifugals in New York. The next day, Thursday, prices advanced ½d to ¾d, with buyers. That would be 9s. 5½d f.o.b. Hamburg, equal 3.98c. duty paid for 96 degrees centrifugals in New York. Friday the market was slightly easier and the close was 9s. 5d. Saturday there was an advance of ¾d, making it equal to 3.99c. in New York for 96 degrees test centrifugals, duty paid. There was a sale of 1,500 bags of Porto Rico at 4c. At last week-end Willett & Gray, New York, said :

"The week shows no change in quotations for prompt delivery, but as usual at beginning of crop some Cuba planters are willing to sell their first products for December-January shipment at 2 7-16c. c. and f., or 20c. for 100 lbs. below the parity of beet sugar for the same months' deliveries, thus repeating the conditions of last season by relinquishing 20c. of the 34c. for 100 lbs. given Cuba by reciprocity.

"Buyers at this reduction do not seem ready yet to do business, and no new crop sugars have yet been placed.

"No old crop Cuba are on offer, but a few Demeraras of the crop now being harvested have been sold to New York refiners at about the parity of the current quotations of 40c., duty paid, for 96 degrees test, and Canada has taken one or two cargoes at 1-32c. above that parity.

"The American beet sugar crop campaign is now in full operation with unusual satisfactory results as regards sugar content, large acreage and good prices."

TEAS—There is a markedly stronger tone locally for Japan teas. The tea market in England has got into much better shape. A mail report under date of Oct. 5 says :

"Two weeks of moderate offerings, concurrently with an improvement in trade, have had the effect of entirely transforming the position of the market, the recent dragging tendency having given place to an active demand with advancing prices. Medium and common teas are nearly ½d per lb. dearer than a fortnight ago, while better grades are frequently 1d. higher."

Another advice says :

"With buying general throughout the country and an improved statistical position it is scarcely surprising that rates for practically all grades have marked a distinct recovery from the low level of values lately ruling, the feature of the sales being the sharp advance in teas under 6d per lb.—this movement corresponds with a similar revival of activity which took place at this time last year, though the strength of the demand then lay in good rather than in common kinds."

An advice from Ceylon under date of Sept. 19, states :

"Offerings during the past fortnight have been very small and considering that nearly 20 per cent. must have been second hand tea, the offerings of first hand have been exceptionally small. There has been a very strong demand for all sorts and prices generally are dearer, good liquoring and tippy brokens showing a smart advance on previous rates. Quality has not been so good as in the previous fortnight. Rain is badly wanted; all districts are behind their average rainfall to date."

COFFEE—While the coffee market continues easy, some authorities persist in the belief that the actual situation is a very strong one. Willett & Gray say : "Upon undoubted reliable communications the Santos receipts will soon be smaller, a matter of days, not weeks, while in Rio next month may see the beginning of smaller receipts. When the coffee world stops to consider what this means, with the Sao Paulo Government purchasing coffee in the open market right along, matters will take on a different complexion, and not the least important question arises, what must happen with shorts and the legitimate trade competing for supplies, with decreasing receipts, and valorization purchases daily taking coffee out of the reach of all buyers for over a year ? But a still greater influence will exert itself, the partial failure of the next crop. From early October, 1886, when options were around 9c., to the Spring of 1887, there was an advance up to about 22c., because the then growing crop was a partial failure. It is useless to deny or belittle the bad conditions of the growing crop, especially in Santos. The unusual questions that have occupied the attention of the coffee world this season have for the time being shut out proper consideration of the true conditions about the future crop. But it is a most certain factor and cannot remain unheeded. The world's visible supply reaches its extreme in October. The world has been discounting the current crop for a year. A change will come by the very nature of circumstances when average production is inferior to consumption."

DRIED FRUITS—There is no reaction anywhere in the dried fruit situation and buying by the retail trade, while extensive, is only for immediate consumption. California seeded raisins, and to some extent currants, are filling the gap left by the shortage in Valencias. Sultanas, according to a cable received yesterday by P. L. Mason & Co., have experienced a further advance of one to two shillings. The Valencia market is firm and currants maintain the recovery recorded a week ago. A mail advice just received states : "The finer growths are very firm indeed, as it is thought there will not be sufficient of this class of fruit to satisfy all requirements."

Experts who have tested Naptho Soap, say that for all household purposes it is one of the finest pieces of Soap in the world We believe that at the prices quoted to the trade, Naptho is the best value of any Soap on the Canadian market, and we do not think it possible any manufacturer can produce a better article at any price.

keted. There is a good crop of Nova Scotia cranberries this year. They are quoted at $6, and Cape Cod at $8. Jamaica oranges are selling at $5.50 per barrel and Californias (200 to 216) $5. Canadian peaches in baskets, $1.25; American pears, $9 per barrel, and California per box, $4.50.

VEGETABLES—The receipts of potatoes are increasing. Prince Edward Island are quoted at 50c. and Nova Scotia at 60c. per bushel. Tomatoes are very plentiful and selling at 25c. to 30c. per six quart basket. Parsnips are $2 per barrel; turnips, $1.25; beets and carrots $1.50 and sweet potatoes, $3.

FISH—Thousands of mackerel have been taken in the shore nets during the past week. The fish are sent to Halifax iced in barrels and shipped to the Boston market where they sell for 22c. a piece for the largest. Should the weather hold good the fishermen have hopes of making some good hauls. Shipping oysters from Halifax to South Africa is a new venture. On the last steamer which sailed from Halifax for Cape Town, eight barrels were shipped to fill an order. The markets both here and in Newfoundland are very firm. The Nova Scotia bankers catch is below the average. In Newfoundland, prime shore cod is quoted at $6.40 to $6.60 per quintal. Quotations here ex vessel are: Shore cod, $5.50; bank, $5; haddock, $3.75; hake, $3; herring, July (Cape Balton), $4.50; Labrador, $3 to $3.50; alervines, $5.50, and Spring mackerel, for No. 3's, $8. Quite a lot of pickled mackerel are now being shipped to the American market.

N. B. MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., Oct. 15, 1906.

The wholesale grocers are very busy. Never were so many Fall goods sold to arrive, particularly dried fruits. Orders are rushed forward as soon as goods are received. The weather has continued very mild. Arrangements for Winter port business are being rapidly made. Prices are generally firm, nearly all seasonable goods as raisins, currants, etc., showing an advance in price. Rice is one of the lines which show an advance; market is supplied from England. Quite free purchases have been made at the higher price. The demand is for a rather improved quality. Owing to competition in price there is too often a disposition to buy an inferior grade. Cream of tartar, which has remained at a low figure for some time, is moving up.

OIL—In burning oil prices are unchanged. The volume of business at this season is large. It is not a factor with the wholesale grocer, and has not been for some years, as the oil men do the business direct with the retailer. Paint oils are quiet and prices unchanged. Lubricating oils just a fair demand. In this line it is a matter of value, chiefly the giving of a grade that gives the best satisfaction. Cod oil comes to hand in fair quantities. The market is quiet.

SALT—Stocks of Liverpool coarse salt quite large. Demand is hardly as active. Values are well maintained. In fine salt just a fair business.

CANNED GOODS—Other and perhaps more seasonable lines take rather a first place. There is not the excitement of last year, when there was a fight on. This season prices are well maintained. While peas are much higher than last year and corn shows a higher price, still, perhaps, the strongest line is Tomatoes. In fruits a fair business. Strawberries firm at high figures. Gallon apples are firmly held; old goods were entirely cleaned up. Meats are held at full figures. Salmon firmly held. In domestic fish, sardines are the strong line.

GREEN FRUIT—Apples show a fair business. New Brunswick stock shows fine quality and are in good supply. The quantity offered is larger each year. Prices keep quite low. For best stock Ontario apples, particularly Spies, will again come into the market. Oranges are high, though some nice Jamaicas are offered at reasonable figures. Lemons keep extreme; a few Californias are seen. Ontario grapes rather higher. Ontario peaches, as a rule, are poor. Few pears except American. Cranberries tending higher; some nice Nova Scotias offered.

DRIED FRUIT—In prunes prices are firmer. New daily expected; they come on a bare market; they will sell well below the few that are on spot. In raisins the disposition is to buy seeded, while spot goods are hardly as firm. New, to arrive, are higher. Malaga layers higher. No Malaga loose. A few new Valencias here, prices high. Very few have been bought. California loose will supply the demand for bulk goods. New figs and peels are here. Prices quite firm. Evaporated apples firmer. Currants firm at the higher prices. Dates will rule rather higher this year. Onions are held firm.

SUGAR—Dealers hold full stocks. The situation is somewhat discouraging; the advance has not been as expected, and the feeling is just now rather easier.

MOLASSES—Good stocks are held. Prices are unchanged. Just fair business. The three lines held are Porto Rico, choice and fancy Barbadoes.

FISH—There is but a light business in fresh fish. Dry fish, particularly cod, while held at what are full figures, are lower than earlier in the season. Pickled herring just a fair price. High-grade fish hard to get. A few shad offered at extreme prices. Smoked herring are easier. Business in smoked haddies now opening. A very large sale for boneless fish.

FLOUR, FEED AND MEAL — In flour prices are unchanged. Feed is very high. Oatmeal unchanged, quite full figures asked. Sales of cornmeal have been large, no change in price. Beans show little change, but tend firmer. Yelloweyes higher. Barley rather firmer.

PROVISIONS—Pork is held more firmly. Some domestic mess now offered. Beef is higher; very little American offered. Smoked meats are high. Pure lard is again advanced. Supply of refined compound light; good demand; price firmer. In fresh meats beef just a fair sale. Prices for the season are considered good. Lamb, in the city, is lower than outside market warrants. Veal, somewhat out of season. Mutton, quite firm. Pork continues high.

TRAVELLER'S ESSAYS.

Prizes Awarded Writers on How to Improve Business.

The observant commercial traveler with capacity for initiative, for seeing things that need doing, is probably the best qualified man to tell a retailer what is most needed for the improvement of his business.

Acting upon that belief, the Canadian Grocer in August invited the commercial travelers in groceries and allied lines to enter an essay competition on the subject, "How a retail grocer can improve his Fall business and enlarge his profits."

The first prize was awarded to A. H. Lawson, Toronto, traveler for T. Kinnear & Co., and the article by him appears in this issue. The second prize was awarded to Laurie H. Smith, representative of the E. W. Gillett & Co., Limited, in Manitoba and Saskatchewan. The third place was awarded to T. H. Stewart, who omitted to state his address. There were a number of other contributions, some of them exceedingly good. One or two dealt with special lines, such as tea, which, in the opinion of the judges, placed them at a disadvantage. The essays awarded first and second place will be published in subsequent issues.

AN END TO THE TAX.

A statement given out by the secretary of the conference of the Premiers, held in Ottawa last week, is to the effect that it was definitely decided that the tax which is exacted of commercial travelers in the Provinces of Quebec, British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, should be abolished, or at least that its removal should be recommended to the different Governments, which amounts to the same thing.

A Good Repeater

A prominent grocer, when recently asked what kind of goods he liked to sell best, replied:—

"Give me a good repeater like Royal Baking Powder; an established article of undisputed merit which housekeepers repeatedly buy and are always satisfied with."

NEW baking powders and new foods, like new fads, come and go but Royal goes on forever. Grocers are always sure of a steady sale of Royal Baking Powder, which never fails to please their customers, and in the end yields to them a larger profit than cheaper and inferior brands.

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN.

There seems to be a little more strength to the cheese market, as all recent country markets show a shade higher prices than the previous week. Although new business is still very light, last week's shipments were again heavier than the receipts.

There is at this time the usual guessing of stocks. It is difficult to arrive at anything near correct figures, but everybody interested in the trade would like to know just what the available supplies are.

We can only let the figures at hand speak for themselves, and we find them as follows, viz :

Receipts at Montreal were last week 74,569 boxes of cheese and 10,178 packages of butter, against 88,129 boxes of cheese and 17,330 packages of butter for the same week of last year, or a total since May 1 of 1,959,277 boxes of cheese and 534,648 packages of butter, as compared with 1,920,409 boxes of cheese and 674,184 packages of butter for the corresponding period of last year.

Exports from Montreal were last week 82,730 boxes of cheese and 7,202 packages of butter, against 84,089 boxes of cheese and 15,117 packages of butter for the same week of last year, or since May 1 1,869,799 boxes of cheese and 346,393 packages of butter, as compared with 1,730,715 boxes of cheese and 521,495 packages of butter for the corresponding period of last year.

Receipts of cheese, therefore, show an increase of 38,868 boxes and the shipments show an increase of 139,084 boxes. Receipts of butter show a decrease of 139,536 packages and the exports show a decrease of 178,102 packages.

Taking the basis of a deficiency of 10 per cent. in last year's receipts of cheese against 5 per cent. for this year's receipts, which is generally conceded a fair estimate, we would find a stock in Montreal at present of 187,442 boxes of cheese against 381,735 boxes for the same time of last year, or 194,293 boxes less than last year at the same time.

These figures are approximately correct, although some of the larger operators figure our present stocks as much larger than these above figures would indicate, but supposing that this year's figures are no nearer correct than last year's figures, comparing receipts and shipments for the two years, we still find that our stocks in Montreal are 100,216 boxes of cheese less than last year at this time.

Closest statistics show that stocks of cheese on this side of the Atlantic are undoubtedly much lighter than last year. Besides the marked decrease in stocks in Montreal, there is far less cheese back in the country. Factories have sold out much closer this year on account of the ruling high prices, and recent weather conditions have still further reduced the flow of milk, so that there is very good ground for present high prices.

Meanwhile there seems to be an accumulation of stocks of rather undesirable quality in the large British centres, which may affect the market later on during the Winter months. At present, however, there is nothing in sight that would cause a decline in prices here.

According to above figures of receipts and exports of butter, our stocks should be 38,566 packages more than at this time last year, yet there is no noticeable surplus. The market is very firm and prices remain above the export basis. The local trade seems to absorb the offerings, and although butter still remains comparatively cheaper than cheese, farmers seem to be satisfied with their returns, as the by-product is useful, and on the whole it pays them very well.

Our shipments of butter are so small an item on the British markets that we have no voice in the matter of fixing prices there, and, especially for the Winter months, it is the local consumption which regulates market values of butter. If it is discovered that there is a surplus over the local demand, we must seek an export outlet for this surplus at best obtainable prices in British markets. It is therefore at present very difficult to give a forecast of the future, as we cannot calculate on the possible surplus.

THE PROVISION SITUATION.

The crest of the advance in live hogs is past and the price is again on the down grade. The packers are paying this week $6.15 f.o.b. country points and receipts are improving. It is expected that between now and Christmas deliveries will be pretty liberal. Domestic prices for pork products remain firm. Stocks seem to be pretty well cleaned up and there is still a good demand for all kinds of meat. Provision dealers, however, say that the demand, owing to high prices, is not as large as a year ago. Even at present prices some of the packers say there is no money in it. One of them said : "When we were paying around $6.15 we had about ¼c. all round. All our smoked meats are smoked and the shrink is heavy, so that at the advance for hogs there is no profit."

The alternative for smoking is dipping in a preparation of creosote called Smokine. It gives the color and something of the flavor, but the product is pickled, not smoked. Its chief advantage is the avoidance of shrink. There is none at all.

In Great Britain there has been a decline of a shilling with a tendency to further weakness. In the export trade Canadian packers, bearing in mind they are marketing a product killed six weeks ago, have come to a point where they could break even ; but in view of the subsequent advance in hogs and the probable seasonable decline in bacon on the English market their easy position does not promise long duration.

OUR LONDON (ENG.) LETTER.

The butter market here has been quieter during the past few days, the inflated prices evidently causing buyers to hold off. Even a drop of 3 kroner in the Copenhagen official quotation has not done much to renew the activity of past weeks. Sellers, however, are not in a hurry and are retaining a firm attitude, relying, no doubt, on continued limited supplies. At present the market is completely cleared of New Zealand butter, arrivals of Australian have naturally been very small now that the season is past. Of Siberian butter a fair quantity has been received, and is realizing from 106 to 90 shillings, according to grade. Just here it might be mentioned that the quality of New Zealand is considered excellent, and it is meeting with a sale such as good quality merits. With regard to Canadian butter, importers are complaining bitterly that they are unable to obtain any offers from Canada --and this just at a time when supplies on hand are not as heavy as desirable. They hardly know what to make of the situation, and anxiously await an opportunity of responding to cable quotations. Such Canadian butter as has changed hands during the week has fetched 114s. to 116s. for choicest, and 108s. for lower grades. Canadian dairies realize 92s. A comparison of these spot quotations with cable offers will show just how much or how little profit is being made over here. As regards quality, there is nothing more to be said beyond what has already been said. Signs are not wanting that the utensils used for butter making in some of the Canadian factories might be kept considerably cleaner.

Canadian cheese has moved rather quietly on the London market, although the position of affairs is decidedly healthy. Holders continue to demand high prices, and buyers are compelled to accept or do without. Possibly the quieter condition of the market is due to the unwillingness of buyers to give so much as 64s. for choicest, but with the chances of continued limited supplies from Canada there can be little doubt that they will eventually be compelled to accept whatever terms are made. Inquiry amongst several importers of standing goes to show that the quality and coloring of Canadian cheese is, taken generally, fairly satisfactory. In numerous cases where Government inspectors have taken samples for examination purposes the test has been satisfactorily borne. There is, however, a lack of high-colored Canadian cheese suitable for some of the English provinces, a fact which is being felt somewhat by importers.

Canadian bacon is very scarce, so, of course, sellers are careful to make the most of their opportunity. Buyers seem to purchase readily enough whatever there is on offer.

SHIP EGGS PROMPTLY.

It Pays—Saves Product, gets Better Price, Makes Reputation.

Since early Spring and all through the Summer egg dealers have been complaining of the manner in which eggs have been held before shipment. Particularly during the extremely warm weather which prevailed this year have they had every ground for complaint. Eggs have arrived in cases of thirty dozen, with one, two, three and five, and sometimes more, dozen unsalable. And the cause in nearly every instance was delay in shipping the eggs.

Grocers in country districts can help to remedy matters if they will. What the commission man wants is prompt shipment of all eggs he buys. He wants the eggs while they are fresh, not when they are two weeks or a month old. A great many grocers make a regular business of their egg trade—buying from the farmers in the neighborhood and selling to dealers in the city.

It may not seem so at first sight, but in the long run it pays to ship the eggs while they are fresh. True, a grocer may ship just a day before the market advances one or two cents, and feel put out about it, but there is the other side; the market may turn easier. On the whole, the increased price the commission man will pay for reliably fresh eggs will more than offset any losses sustained by too hasty shipping. Besides there is the loss of the eggs that go bad. More important still is the reputation a country merchant may establish by prompt shipment of his eggs. Reputation is a good thing in the egg trade as elsewhere. Once his is established, a grocer can obtain the highest market price for his eggs every time. The dealer learns to rely on him and when it is a case of a quarter or half a cent a dozen he is willing to give him just that much better price because he knows he is getting first-class value for his money.

The writer knows of one case in which a shipper shipped a lot of 1,920 dozen, of which 148 dozen, over 7 per cent., were cracked, and 189 dozen, over 9 per cent., rotten, while the shipment was 7 dozen short. The shipper expected to get the ruling price, which was 17c., for these eggs which were rotten, cracked or short—344 dozen in all. But he did not. The dealer saw to that. And also he looked for another shipper in that district.

It pays in the long run to do the right thing; to ship the eggs while they are fresh and will bring the highest price. It is a poor policy to gain to-day and lose every day after to-day.

PROVISION AND DAIRY MARKETS.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS—According to packers the situation in provisions is very strong. Lard, particularly, is noticeable for the strength displayed by the market. Locally there is fair trade in hams and bacon, Export business is very light.

BUTTER—The market continues firm under a good local demand, while call for export is almost nil. Notwithstanding the decline in England of three kroner, the market here is on the contrary firm in tone and values, proving that the home trade controls the present situation. The demand at present is for good keeping Fall butter to supply the coming Winter's trade. As soon as the quality deteriorates prices will have to decline as exportation at current rates is impossible. Stocks here are of moderate proportions and the situation would be a very healthy one if we could have two or three weeks more export trade with the Old Country.

Medium creamery	0 23	0 23½

CHEESE—This week the market rules a little firmer, while demand has also brightened up a little. Contrary to expectations, the October make has so far ruled as high as the September, proving that the situation is a strong one with stocks well held and holders determined to prevent any serious decline. This can be accomplished now that the season is so near its close, with the result that the season of 1906 will go on record as one of the best, if not the best, in the history of the Canadian dairy trade. Stocks in England are large, but here in Canada they are light and prospects are for a much shorter market than we are accustomed to.

EGGS—First-class eggs are difficult to obtain and bring a good price. For selects, fresh dealers are asking as high as 24c., and sometimes 25c. There are several kinds of No. 1 eggs offering, including limed, fresh and held. All sell at 20c. Receipts are very light, and consequently dealers are compelled to use cold storage to a very great extent.

TORONTO.

PROVISIONS—Dealers are beginning to admit that the domestic demand is lessening. "It's not what it was a year ago," said one of them this week. But prices are firm. Long clear is off 1-4c., but that indicates merely a slight accumulation in that one line generally. Stocks are very small. Lard is up 1-4c.

EGGS—Price is now much a matter of grade. Practically nothing is coming in. "Five cents a dozen for strictly new laid is nothing," said one large dealer, and he quoted the cream of the market at 25c. to 30c. Last week's prices, however, are still nearly right. BUTTER-MAKING IN SIBERIA.

Mr. Henry Cooke, writing in the Estate Magazine, says that nothing is more remarkable in the commercial history of the last generation than the growth of the butter making industry in Western Siberia. It is one of the first results of the construction of the railway, and from the point of view of the general well-being of the peasant population the most promising outcrop of the conditions now prevailing. It is at present the main resource of the inhabitants of the entire region. During the succession of bad harvests previous to last year, which crippled the earnings of the peasants and entailed a general stagnation of business in a country so exclusively dependent on the crops as Western Siberia, the income derived from the sale of their milk and butter saved the peasants from much of the suffering and destitution that must otherwise have befallen them. Previous to 1893 no butter was produced in Siberia for export abroad. The first to make butter under modern methods in Siberia was an English woman married to a Russian, whose dairy farm at Ohernaia Reitchka, in the district of Tiumen, was in 1886 the only one in Siberia, and is still a well-known model of its kind.

In 1893 Mr. Wolkoff, a Russian, opened near Kourgan the first dairy producing butter for export beyond the Urals; 14,400 lbs. were exported in 1894. Ten years later butter making had become the staple industry of the country as regards international trade, and the chief resources of its peasant population. Over 2,000 dairies are now scattered over Western Siberia, their export in 1903 being 78,904,720 lbs. Butter, thanks solely to the Siberian supply, now occupies the sixth place in value in the Russian export trade, and promises to exceed all other items except grain. The British market is Siberia's largest customer, Denmark acting as forwarding agent. In 1899 the import from Russia was so inconsiderable as to be merely included in the board of trade returns under "other countries." In 1900 it forced its way to an individual heading, the exports from Russia amounting to 378,452 cwt. Last year the butter exports from Russia, mostly from Siberia, were valued at about $15,450,000.

Anber & Shabine, general store, Aylmer, Que., have dissolved partnership, and the business will be continued by F. N. Anber.

EXPANSION OF CANADA'S PORK AND BEEF PACKING INDUSTRY.

The latest addition to this important industry is the large plant just completed by the old-established and well-known firm of Gunns' Limited, of Toronto.

For over thirty years this firm has done a large business in pork products, and to meet the needs of their growing trade have now enlarged the sphere of their operations by the erection of what is universally conceded to rank among the most modern and up-to-date, and also one of the largest, packing plants in Canada.

The location is well chosen—alongside the well-equipped yards of the Union Stock Yards Co., at Toronto Junction, which have already captured a large share of the live stock trade of the country.

An inspection of the new plant is a revelation of the latest and most improved methods and machinery for carrying on the varied operations of a modern packing house. The large plants of Chicago are among the sights of that great city, but we have here in our midst a plant which is a model of completeness, and in all but point of size compares most favorably with any on the continent.

The plant, which is situated on a lot six acres in extent, comprises a group of buildings, including main building, slaughter house, smoke houses, fertilizer building, carpenter and repair shop, ice house, power house, boiler room, two-storey stock sheds, and a large horse stable. Space will not permit more than a brief enumeration of some of the chief features. On the fourth floor of the main building are situated the sausage room and the cook room, also the ammonia pipe lofts in which the air is chilled for circulation to the beef and hog chill rooms below.

On the third floor is found, connected with the slaughter house building, a large hanging or cooling room in which the dressed carcasses are hung before being run into the chill rooms. These are six in number, two for beef and four for hogs.

The large cutting room is also on this floor, and a large section for preparing canned meats, etc.

On the second floor is the export curing room, several cold storage rooms, and in a bright, sunny place, facing south, large rooms for the use of employes as lunch rooms, etc.

On the ground floor are located the general offices and private offices, handsomely fitted up in hardwood, with plateglass windows, partitions, etc. In another section are the local and export shipping rooms, a number of cold storage and general storage rooms. The curing cellars extend under the entire main building and slaughter house building.

In the slaughter house building the killing floor is the top or third flat. Here the latest machinery and appliances are found for handling hogs, cattle, sheep and calves. The second floor of this building is fitted up as a lard refinery, and the ground floor as a tank room, with rendering plant, etc. In the cellars are hide curing rooms, cold storage, etc.

The visitor is impressed with the thoroughness of the arrangements for light, sanitation and the utmost cleanliness of operation. No expense has been spared in this or other lines. We are informed that the total cost of the plant is in the neighborhood of $300,000.

The smoke houses are sixteen in number, four on each flat, fitted with rails on which the meats are smoked suspended from "trees," each holding about fifty hams or pieces of bacon.

The entire plant is insulated with cork sheets cemented to the walls and partitions and plastered outside with a white marble cement plaster. This is damp proof, cannot absorb odors, and presents an appearance of cleanliness that is very attractive.

The refrigeration plant consists of two 75-ton machines, installed by the Linde British Refrigeration Co. In the power house is also found a complete plant for generating electric light and power, the machinery throughout the plant being operated by motors.

Special attention has been paid to reducing the risk of fire to a minimum. The buildings are subdivided by solid brick walls with fire doors on every opening. On the roof of main building is a 30,000 gallon tank supplying the sprinkler system, while outside water curtains over exposed windows, with a system of standpipe and hydrants, complete the arrangements for protection from fire.

The past years have proven the ability of Gunns' Limited, to successfully handle anything they may undertake, and their energy and enterprise in this new venture deserves the support of the retail trade throughout the country, as we understand they purpose catering specially to this trade. The capacity of the plant is 6,000 hogs per week and 1,000 cattle, besides sheep and calves. Owing to scarcity of hogs, it is not expected to operate to full capacity for some time, but in any event the motto "Quality, not quantity," will always be the guiding principle of the management.

LATEST CANADIAN FLOUR MILL

Western Canada Flour Mills Co. Plant at St. Boniface—Great Structures Begun and Completed Within a Year—The Men Behind the Enterprise —Flourmaking.

One of the most important industries established in Winnipeg during the last few years of that city's phenomenal growth is the plant of the Western Canada Flour Mills Co., recently started at St. Boniface. On the 9th of August, 1905, the first sod for the foundation of the new mill was turned. Within twelve months the three buildings composing the plant were completed and equipped, and what is acknowledged to be the most up-to-date establishment of its kind in the world was ready to begin operations.

The company chose for its site 35 acres of land between the lines of the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian Northern, and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railways, thereby obtaining track facilities which even at present permit of ten cars being loaded simultaneously.

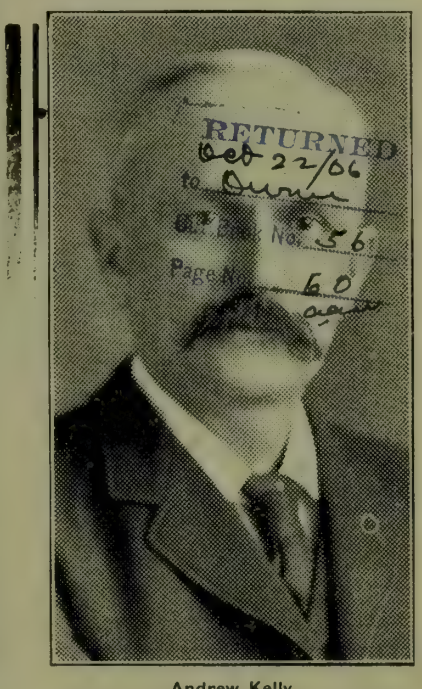
S. A. McGaw, Toronto.
Eastern Manager, Western Canada Flour Mills Co.

As regards the buildings themselves, nothing is left to be desired. Their construction is modern in every way, and especial attention has been paid to rendering them fireproof. In connection with this the company has provided its own water supply by sinking a well in a corner of the boiler room, from which water is pumped into a 100,000 gallon tank elevated 165 feet. Connected with this is a complete system of sprinklers, extending throughout the buildings. From the tank a powerful stream of water can be thrown right over the top of the working house of the elevator. At the base of the tank are two additional reservoirs, one of 100,000 and the other of 40,000 gallons capacity. This system of protection, together with the splendid construction of the buildings themselves, has resulted in insurance companies considering this the safest flour mill risk in the world, and granting it the lowest premium paid by any concern in the same line of business.

The elevator consists of a working house and ten tanks each 80 feet high. The foundation walls are four feet thick and of solid cement and steel, while the piers have bases seven feet square. Between these piers are arches of cement and steel, forming long corridors through which pass the 36-inch conveyor belts. In the floor of each tank the steel binding rods are only two inches apart, while the walls are reinforced by perpendicular steel rods every two feet, and by flat 1 1-4 inch circular steel bands every foot, one band being near the outside and the other near the inside of the wall. If the wheat is to remain in the elevator it is received in the pits at the base of the working house, elevated to the scales, weighed, and passed through cleaners, then transferred to the tracks for storage. If desired for use in the mill it is returned to the working house by the conveyor belts, and is there re-weighed and forwarded to the mill for grinding. The mill is six storeys with cupola, and is 200 feet long by 56 feet wide. The basement walls are four feet thick and the brick walls up to the third floor two feet six inches. All sash and lintels are of galvanized iron, and the windows are glazed with wired glass. The mill has a capacity of 4,000 barrels per day.

From the fifth floor of the mill the manufactured flour passes by a system of elevators and conveyors across the double railway tracks to the warehouse. This building is 216 feet long, 70 feet wide, and three storeys high at its lowest point, and six storeys high in the centre, where the packing is done. It has a storage capacity of 70,000 barrels. The flour passes into great steel tanks, covered with asbestos, so that it is absolutely protected from every form of dirt, and from the intrusion of any insect life. Below the tanks is the packing floor. The bags are filled and weighed automatically, but the sewing up is done by hand. When sewed, the bags drop through a hole in the floor onto the conveyor belt to be delivered to the cars or any part of the warehouse.

In addition to the Winnipeg mill, the company operates branches in Brandon, Man., and Goderich, Ont., capable of producing 400 and 1,800 barrels per day, respectively, giving a total daily production by this one company of 7,200 barrels of flour per day. Some idea of what this amount means may be gathered from the fact that a year's product of 300 days' running would fill enough freight cars to cover 150 miles of track, while if placed in barrels and these barrels were laid end to end they would stretch from Quebec to Vancouver. To make these 7,200 barrels of flour daily requires a close approximate of 36,000 bushels of wheat, and the amount needed to run these mills the 300 days of a year would be 10,800,000 bushels, which at 75c. per bushel, would call for the distribution by this company among the farmers of Western Canada of $8,100,000. The company employs in Winnipeg about 100 men, with 75 more in Goderich and Brandon.



Andrew Kelly,
President, Western Canada Flour Mills Co.

The necessity of good shipping facilities is shown by the fact that the "Purity" brand is shipped to Great Britain, Continental Europe, South Africa, South America, Japan, China, Siam, Burmah, Russia, Australia and the Oceanic Islands. This export trade demands the attention of two offices, that via Montreal and New York, being handled at Toronto, and that via Vancouver at Winnipeg, and in all the principal ports of the world are special or general agents for "Purity" flours. The principal officers, Messrs. Andrew Kelley, of Brandon, president, and S. A. McGaw, of Goderich, vice-president and general manager, have their offices in Winnipeg.

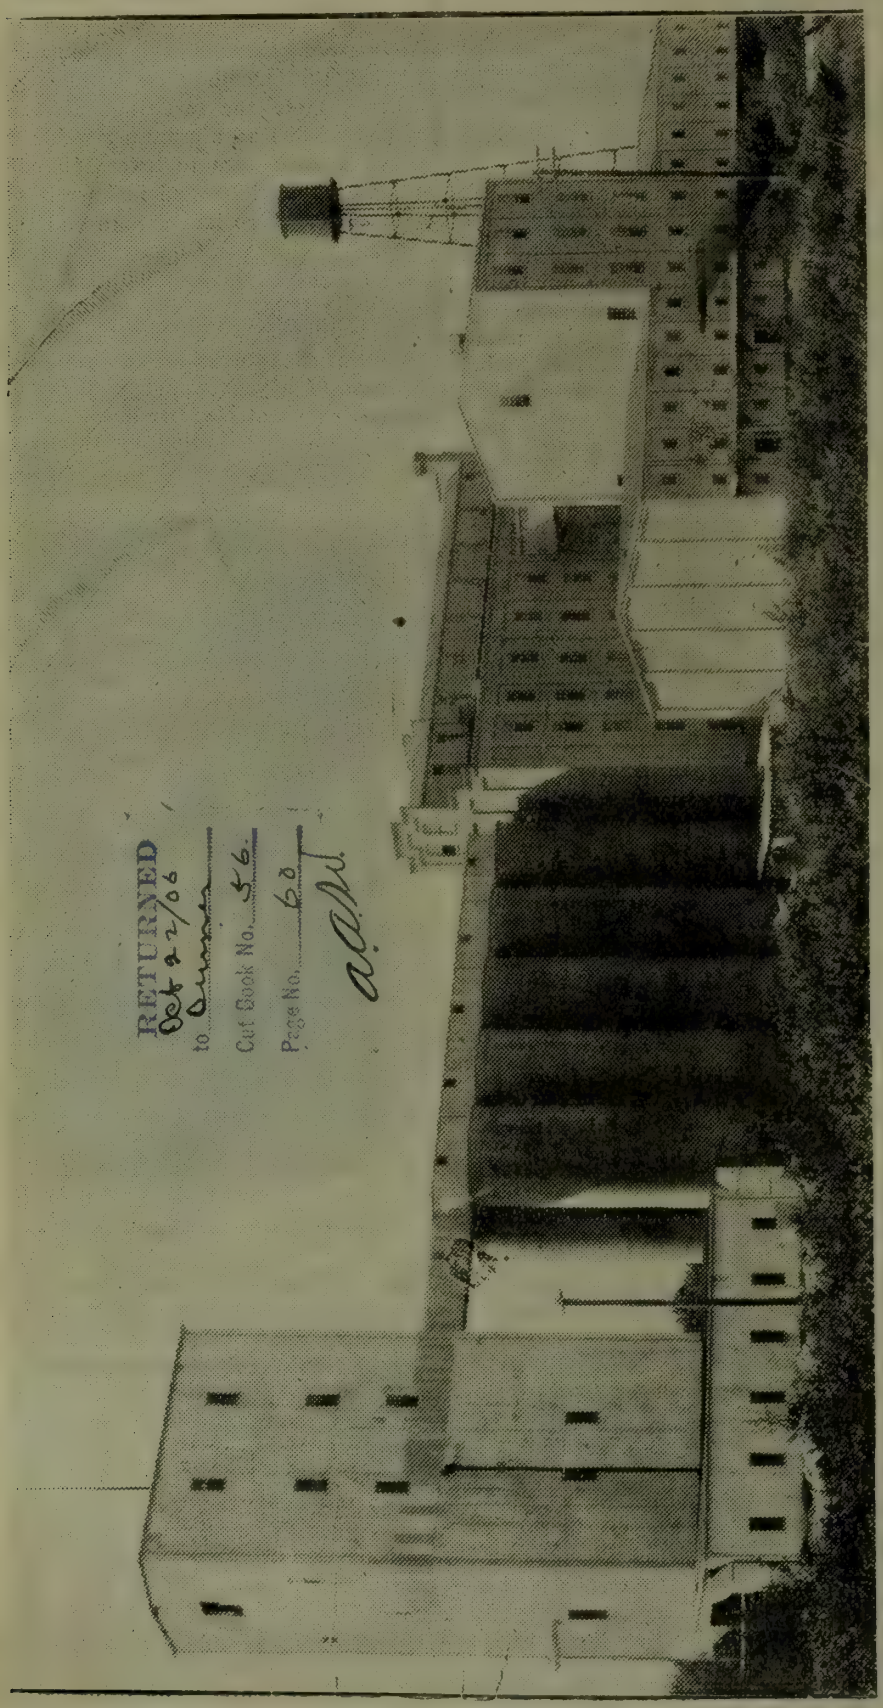
From whatever standpoint it may be looked at, Canada—and Winnipeg especially—has every reason to be proud of the Western Canada Flour Mills Co.



Western Canada Flour Mills, St. Boniface.

OGILVIE MILLS PROFITS.

Shareholders of the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co. held their annual meeting in Montreal the end of last week. C. R. Hosmer, president, occupied the chair. Net earnings for the year were declared to be $235,262.45. At the meeting there was considerable comment upon the misfortunes which had been the lot of the company during the year, notably the loss by fire incurred by the Glenora mills, Montreal, and the accident to the elevator at Fort William.

Directors of the company were elected as follows: C. R. Hosmer, president; F. W. Thompson, vice-president and managing director; Sir George A. Drummond, Sir I. Montague Allan, E. S. Clouston, H. S. Holt, Shirley Ogilvie. The following officers were appointed: T. Williamson, secretary; S. A. McMurtry, treasurer; W. A. Black, general manager western division; Col. A. E. Labelle, local manager; Frank H. Anson, general superintendent; George A. Coslett, Fort William, manager.

McCabe Brothers, of Duluth, owners of elevators at Bergman and Rosewell, Man., have purchased the Plum Coulee elevator from Graves & Riley, of Winnipeg.

A POPULAR SALESMAN.

Goodfellowship ran high at Roumegous, King street west, Toronto, on Saturday evening last. The occasion was a dinner and presentation of a handsome suitcase to W. H. Turpin, the genial city representative of the E. W. Gillett Co., Limited, and president of the Grocery Clerks' Association of Toronto, who has just been appointed to represent his company in the Niagara Peninsula and South Western Ontario.

A very happy time was spent, and Mr. Turpin's many friends wished him much success in his new field. Mr. Turpin will be succeeded by John J. Watt, who will look after the interests of Gillett's goods in the city.

CANNED MEATS PRETTY GOOD.

The report of Chief Government Analyst MacFarlane on canned meats selected in various parts of the Dominion, has just been received by the Inland Revenue Department. The goods analysed were samples packed in Canada and an equal number put up by United States manufacturers and offered for sale in this country. Only four samples out of the total collection were found to give evidence of decomposition, a proportion amounting to only ¼ per cent. Boric acid was the only preservative found, and only in very small quantities, not exceeding the limit fixed by the English Parliamentary Commission of .05 oz. In general it may be stated that the results are favorable to the manufacturers, both in the east and west.

FLOUR AND CEREAL

Advance in Wheat—Car Shortage Mainly Responsible—Conditions in the Argentine—Domestic Flour Trade is Active and There is Some Export.

Last week's advance in wheat was due primarily, it is said, to the car shortage. People with October contracts on their hands were not getting the wheat down fast enough to make their shipments. A contributing cause was the news of unfavorable weather conditions for the growing crops in the Argentine Republic. The Argentine crop comes to harvest about the end of December or first of January, therefore now is a critical period. Argentine weather will be a factor in the wheat market for a couple of months or more. The car shortage is general in both Canada and the States and an advance in Chicago assisted the advance here.

MONTREAL.

GRAIN—Oats are higher this week. Few lots are offering since the harvesting of the new crop. Corn, although still firm, is expected to ease off shortly, since the crop is said to have been a particularly good one. Other lines are unchanged.

FLOUR—Flour has not changed since last report. The market is firm but, while an advance would not cause surprise, higher prices are not expected at the moment. Prices this year are considerably lower than those of 1905 for the same period. Business locally is reported excellent. Good orders are being received from all sections of the country and millers are quite satisfied with the turnover they are having. Export demand is not particularly large, but a fair amount of trade is being transacted. South Africa still imports a great deal of this article, while orders from the Old Country are by no means small.

GRAIN—Wheat is considerably higher than a week ago. There was an advance last week of 3c., reaching the highest on Saturday. On Monday the market took a return and went back half a cent. On Saturday the northern ruled at 82c., Monday at 81¾c., and closed at ¼c. bid and ¾c. asked. Trade was quiet. Millers did not seem disposed to follow the advance. On the other hand, there were reports of pretty good export business, but the reports were difficult of confirmation. Opinion here seems to be general that if receipts were as free as they should be at Fort William and Port Arthur we would have cheaper wheat. Receipts are not one-half what they were a year ago, due probably to the scarcity of cars. Ontario wheat advanced ½c. Barley and oats are about unchanged.

The elevator at Grand Coulee, Sask., belonging to Joseph Glenn, of Indian Head, collapsed on October 5. There were about 44,000 bushels of grain in it at the time. The C.P.R. provided facilities for immediate shipment, and now that the grain is removed the owner expects to be able to jack the building into position again.

Up to October 12, 18,863,000 bushels of wheat and 1,123,000 bushels of coarse grains had been marketed in Western Canada, compared with 12,698,000 bushels of wheat and 623,000 bushels of other grains marketed at the corresponding date last year.

BISCUITS AND CONFECTIONERY

Manufacturers of Biscuits all Increasing Trade—Greater Call for Finer Lines—The Insatiable West—Candy Possibilities.

The large biscuit makers in Canada are all increasing their business and one wonders what the explanation of this consumption is. The manager of Christie, Brown & Co. attributes it to the increased prosperity and wealth, combined with the cultivation of taste fostered by the excellence of the product. He didn't say this last — he was too modest; but it is true enough. There's no country in the world where better biscuits are made than in Canada.

"What means are adopted by grocers to increase their sales of biscuits?" this same manager was asked.

"Some of the more progressive ones," he said, "have established a biscuit department. But we have found that the men who push other goods will push biscuits. Some time ago I was in a grocery in Hamilton. A customer came in—a lady—and after she had got what she wanted the proprietor, who was serving her, brought out a new line of biscuits. 'Here's something new and very nice. Wouldn't you like some?' 'Yes, you may send me a pound.' 'And here's something new in canned goods, fish, very appetizing, indeed.' 'Yes, I'll take a can of that.' When the lady had gone I told the grocer I much admired his manner of introducing and pushing goods. 'We've got to do it,' he said. That man has a large account with us.

Afternoon Tea.

"Some grocers have a weekly afternoon tea. They serve a certain line of tea to all comers and usually serve biscuits with it. We often receive word that a grocer is going to serve tea on a certain day and if we have any line of biscuits we want to introduce send them along. Some grocers make a display of biscuits on plates and when drawing the attention of customers to them invite them to sample lines they may fancy."

What may be termed the staple lines of biscuits number perhaps a hundred, but large firms make up to 500 varieties. In the west the biscuit trade is increasing enormously. The finest lines go to the Klondike and sodas sell there for a dollar a pound. There is a biscuit made for miners that looks like a nicely browned very high grade dog biscuit, but it is delicious and highly nutritious. When steamed it swells to the size of a small loaf. It is made from flour in which practically all of the nutritive elements have been retained and is so rich in gluten that when steamed it can be picked up by a corner and will hold together.

Demand for Expensive Lines.

In old Ontario the maximum consumption has not been reached. It is surprising what expensive kinds can be bought in very small stores. Biscuits retailing at 50c. a pound are commonly carried. They are very light and small and a few cents worth will make a plateful.

There are lines which a very few years ago were made only for the Christmas trade and now there is a steady trade for them all the year. Such are plum pudding, short bread, and fruit cakes. There still is an extra demand for them at Christmas time. The demand for these goods in the west is very large.

There probably is no specialty so easily pushed as biscuits and if grocers would make it a practice to call customers' attention to the better lines they would find it much more profitable than worrying about whether or not their customers have sugar enough to carry them over Sunday.

SPEAK OF THE CANDIES.

R. Higgins & Son, a prosperous Toronto firm of grocers, have been specializing in their confectionery and seemingly without advertising have built up a department in their business which has well repaid their trouble. "The secret of success in this line," said Mr. Higgins, "is to keep the show cases bright and attractive and to mention to your customers that you keep confectioneries. In this way even though they do not really need them they will think of the children's sweet teeth and be tempted to buy. Never forget to mention any new line of confectioneries you may have on hand and anything novel, such as little pails containing candies resembling seashore stones, is almost sure to sell well. At Christmas and Easter there should be special decorating in the show cases and windows, as these are the times when trade is at its best."

NEW SWISS CHOCOLATES.

A new line of Swiss milk chocolates is about to be put on the Canadian market by S. H. Ewing & Sons, Montreal, who have been appointed Canadian agents for Ribet's Swiss Milk Chocolates. Ribet's chocolate house was established in 1856, and the quality of the goods turned out was soon recognized, first in France where it was preferred to all others by the Empress Eugenie. The company has experienced a gradual growth until it has attained its present size. Its factories, situated at Renens, Lausanne, Switzerland, are equipped with the most modern machinery. Many fancy lines are manufactured. Bars, cakes and croquettes are obtainable at different prices. The chocolate is always neatly wrapped and is in this way able to attract attention the moment it catches the eye.

CONFECTIONERY POSSIBILITIES.

Confectionery is one of the most profitable specialties a grocer can carry and only a little pains need be taken to make a candy department a substantial feature. The first essential is means for effective display. Carry the good goods. Let the little shop round the corner have the cent goods. At any rate don't take up valuable display room with them. Handle good lines and handle them well and the candy department will soon be as easy as money from home.

CONFECTIONERY NOTES.

Jas. McLaughlin, of Jas. McLaughlin & Co., biscuit manufacturers, Owen Sound, has purchased property in Fort William, and it is understood that the firm will erect a warehouse on the site.

Walters & Son, confectioners, Sydney, C.B., have patented a cabinet designed by Mr. Walters for the purpose of displaying biscuits. The cabinet is on the plan of the extension bookcases used in many offices and libraries, and is planned to hold standard-sized boxes furnished by the manufacturer who purchases the rights to the invention.

The grocery, hardware and bakery business conducted by J. Windover & Son in Frankford for some years has been taken over by the son, W. E. Windover. Mr. Windover, sr., is going west. He has been in the prairie provinces this Summer and was in the passenger train wrecked recently near Sudbury. Fortunately he escaped injury. Several Frankford people were killed or badly injured.

HELD THE EGGS TOO LONG.

Charley Hands, of the London Daily Mail, went into a New York beanery for a quick breakfast. The eggs the waiter brought him appeared to be debilitated.

"Waitah," said Hands, in his best British voice, "these eggs carn't be fresh."

"Oh, yessir," said the waiter, "them's fresh laid—laid yistiddy."

"Very well," said Hands, as he moved back, "p'raps they are. But I will say this—the hen must have carried them about in her system a long time."

CANADIAN FRUIT PRODUCTS

In Ontario aside from apples this has been one of the most successful seasons fruit growers have had. This is the verdict of one of the Government inspectors whose duties keep him constantly in contact with the industry throughout the province. There was not throughout the season a pronounced slump or glut. Everything grown was wanted at good prices. This has been due largely to the abnormal consumption attributable to a hot Summer and good times. Wholesale fruit dealers in Toronto are of one opinion that demand for fruit in Ontario had never been so heavy.

The only failure was the plums, and they did not even get a start.

Western Demand.

A marked feature of this year's fruit trade has been the demand of the northwest for all classes of fruit and vegetables. From one shipping point, St. Catharines, one hundred carloads of fruit and vegetables have been shipped this season to Winnipeg and beyond. These shipments included all the small fruits, besides peaches, pears, early apples, grapes, corn, many tons of tomatoes, peppers, cucumbers and other vegetables. Certainly not more than half the shipments to Western Canada from the Niagara district were from this station. Besides there have been considerable shipments from other districts and there will yet be large shipments of apples. Altogether Ontario's contribution of fruit this year to the west will be measured by hundreds of carloads.

Apple Crop.

The same authority says of the apple crop: "The apple crop in Ontario may be said to be light, or light to medium. The quality is somewhat irregular. The dry weather of some time back had a tendency to make the fruit small in many localities. The codling moth also, encouraged by the dry weather, made its appearance and we find many apples badly affected. While the black spot cannot be said to be prevalent, we have something worse in the form of a sooty fungus, or fly speck, often termed the ink spot (Leptothyrium pomi) is reported on a large number of apples, Greenings particularly, from Southern and Western Ontario. It developed with the recent wet weather. It is feared that it will have a serious effect upon the keeping quality of the fruit and seems to develop even in cold storage."

Official Review.

The Government's latest fruit crop report, dated September 30, says of apples:

"The reports show a lessened estimate of the crop again this month so that upon the whole the Winter crop must be regarded as light to medium. There will be a fairly large aggregate available for market purposes from the fact that there is some crop almost everywhere, but in very few cases is there an average crop. The Nova Scotian reports show no improvement beyond a medium crop of Winter apples. The Ontario crop, north of Lake Ontario, is seriously affected by the dry weather. There is still time if the weather should turn cooler with more moisture for an improvement here, but without these favorable conditions the crop will be almost a failure. Georgian Bay is more favorably situated for Winter stock than any other part of Ontario. Growers are beginning to pack the Winter varieties in Southern Ontario three weeks earlier than the normal time for ripening."

Three Districts.

The Ontario apple crop is in three districts, east, north and west of Toronto, or more definitely, the north shore of Lake Ontario from Oshawa to Napanee, the Georgian Bay district and the western district. East of Oshawa the growers specialize more. The district has many great orchards. The farmers have made a business of growing for the British market and are the principal producers of the Ben Davis. In this district, at Oshawa, Cobourg, Colborne, Brighton and Trenton, are great storage warehouses. At Colborne and Brighton together there is storage for three or four hundred thousand barrels. Heretofore the principal part of the crop from this district has gone east for export and does still, but a change is noticeable this year. It is in this district that apple culture is developing and progressing most rapidly. Thousands of new trees have been set out this season, but they have been selected with a view to supplying the demand from the Canadian west and are mostly of the Fall variety, though many Winter trees have been set out too.

Little Storage West.

Many apples from Western Ontario are stored in the lake towns mentioned. West of Toronto there are practically no apple storehouses.

For the Georgian Bay district there are large storehouses at Thornbury and Meaford. The principal source of the apples heretofore shipped to the west has been Western Ontario and the Georgian Bay district.

The co-operative movement among growers is developing very rapidly and is regarded by the Government inspectors as a source of strength and a promise of healthy development.

At Oakville last week a meeting was held to mark the opening of the storage house for the co-operative association of that district. There were about 60 present, Government Inspector P. J. Carey, H. W. Dawson, Toronto; R. Thompson and D. E. Stewart from the Niagara district. The president, W. H. MacNeil, occupied the chair. They discussed pretty thoroughly the fruit situation and transportation difficulties.

Making Progress.

Progress is being made in the packing and grading of fruit. Great quantities of apples are marketed direct from the orchard, but many thousands of barrels go into storage. Then the grading and packing are more deliberate. Greenings, Kings, Wagners, Seeks and other early kinds go out first, to be followed by Phoenix, Baldwin, Fallawater and such Fall varieties. The hardy Winter kinds, Spy, Russett, Ben Davis, Stark, etc., come last and many are held through the Winter to be repacked and shipped in the Spring when prices are high.

British Columbia's Fruit Industry

For a province which has not been considered seriously in other parts of the Dominion from an agricultural or horticultural point of view, British Columbia is doing wonders in the way of producing fruit on a commercial basis, and marketing it in most scientific and approved modern manner. Indeed, in the last particular, that of the handling and shipping, the packers in British Columbia may give an example to be imitated in the older fruit districts of the eastern provinces. Here in the west, the fruit-growers have not only adopted what is good, of the methods in use in California, but they have done much on their own account in the way of improving and specializing the handling of fruit to get it in shape to stand long distance transportation and to place it on the market in attractive packages as as well as in good condition. Two features alone, the peach crate and the apple box, are well worth adopting as they are in use in British Columbia. These are so far ahead of the basket for peaches and the barrel for apples, as still in vogue in Eastern Canada, that there is simply no comparison.

Good Average Crop.

But of the fruit crop itself, as it has turned out, is turning out, so far this year, the general statement is perhaps true, that it is fully up to the average and quite as large as that of last year. The early, small fruits, especially strawberries, were not so plentiful as might have been desired, and in the coast sections, some backward weather knocked out part of the crop. The raspberry crop was excellent, but not large enough to meet demand. But that is always true of all the varieties grown in B.C. There is an avid market always ready for many times more than the quantity produced.

This year the cherry crop of the coast was good, that of the upper country, not quite so good, frost striking some of the blossoms in the Okanagan Valley. The production in the different districts is yet very limited, as cherries are always in such demand for home consumption that very few find their way into the big Northwest market. The price in almost every instance has been such as to net the grower from 7c. to 10c. per lb. This price is not out of the way, proceeds in other years being as great. There will be many cherry trees in the Southern Okanagan Lake district coming into bearing in a few years, and in the coast districts there will also be a greater number of trees producing, as numbers have been set out and this is one fruit which does very well in the coast districts. Perhaps Vancouver Island cannot be beaten in any part of America for its cherries. Certainly the famed Black Tartarians and Royal Anns as grown there fully equal if not surpass the finest shipped from California.

Peach Crop a Factor.

For the first time the peach crop of British Columbia has been a factor of any size in the market. This season too, the fruit has been quite extensively shipped down to the coast, for the Okanagan and Kamloops districts are the peach-growing sections of the province. The lower portion of Okanagan Lake will be one vast peach orchard in a few years, thousands of trees having been set out and as many of them have been now set and cultivated for three years, next year's production is bound to be vastly greater than any this, as the fourth year of an orchard's standing in the favored districts, it will produce a good crop. Peachland, about half way down Okanagan Lake on the west side, is the largest producer of peaches, having gone into the planting of this fruit early. For two or three seasons the fruit has been marketed in ever increasing quantities, until this year, no less than from 1,000 to 3,000 boxes per week were shipped by express. In one shipment from Peachland, a whole car of peaches and tomatoes was sent out, while even larger shipments were made at one time, though not to a single point.

The total crop from the peach orchards of British Columbia this year, is hard to estimate. Peachland probably sent out over 10,000 crates, while Kelowna, another big fruit centre on the lake, Vernon and Kamloops were also shippers to a certain extent. The price netted the growers an average of $1 per crate. There was no difficulty to find sale for the fruit, as Vancouver and other coast cities sought the fruit as soon as it was available, and the Northwest market was in large part not covered. The quality of Okanagan peaches is such that in competition with those from California the latter have no show, being very inferior in every way. While being remarkably well-flavored and juicy, Okanagan peaches, like the apples and other fruits of the district are extremely large, and no matter how large they are, there is never that dry flavorless quality and texture of southern peaches.

Two New Sources of Supply.

Next year, Summerland and Penticton, two large districts near the southern end of Okanagan Lake, will have many peaches to market, their trees in many cases being now old enough to bear. While the peach production of the province is increasing and will increase, the market is so large that there is no fear of over-reaching the demand. Then the area suitable particularly for peaches is limited, so that the industry is an especially attractive one. When one finds orchards turning out from 300 to 450 boxes of peaches per acre, on the average, and the net price to the grower $1 per box, the returns are seen to be very profitable.

In plums, and other stone fruits, not so much attention has been paid as to peaches, apples, cherries and pears, in the Okanagan and other interior districts. On the coast, and in the Fraser Valley, plums and prunes are freely grown, but most varieties of the former are hard to mature, owing to the damp climate, too much humidity spoiling the fruit before it ripens. The crop this year was well up to the average, while prices were fairly good. The Kootenay districts, not yet, to any extent, on the producing list for tree fruits, have made a record in production of small fruits, especially the strawberry. From Nelson, many thousand boxes of strawberries have been shipped during the past two seasons. Next year there promises to be a much larger production, as all along the Kootenay River and the shores of Kootenay Lake small ranches are dotted, and development of these has been going on very rapidly. West of Nelson too, and where the Kootenay joins the Columbia River, there are many plantations, and orchards which will in very short time be in full bearing.

Strawberry Crop.

The strawbery crop netted the growers almost an average of $2 per crate of 24 lbs. this year, and like the peach crop there was not half enough to meet the demand in the Northwest. The coast districts of the province are also large shippers of strawberries, and there is a section between Kamloops and Sicamous Junction, on the C.P.R., centring round Salmon Arm, which is also shipping a large amount of small fruit, and is increasing its production annually.

At the present time the apple and pear crop is being marketed. There are many varieties of Winter and Fall pears which are now in their prime and these are being put on the market rapidly. The apple crop is not larger than last year. The area in bearing orchards has not materially increased, the trees not maturing so fast as peaches. In all sections of the province greater attention is now being paid to variety, and those sorts adapted to the district where they are to be grown, are being selected. In former times, when the first orchards were set out the same care was not exercised, so many of the older trees produce fruit of little commercial value. The commercial side of fruit-growing is receiving close atention in B.C. and the results have amply repaid the efforts, at the same time demonstrating the importance of the porvince as a field for the horticulturist seeking a place where his industry will be profitable if pursued on right lines.

Wonderful Progress.

From a close personal inspection of the various districts of the interior, the writer is able to say without hesitation that no adjective of less emphasis than "wonderful" will adequately describe the progress made in the fruit-growing industry. "Marvellous" would not be too emphatic a term to use in describing results seen in some districts, especially in the irrigated sections. Of these, the lower Okanagan Lake districts are perhaps the most remarkable. Kelowna, Peachland, Smmerland, and Penticton are centres of districts each as large in area and with as great capabilities as the famed Niagara Peninsula of Ontario, while the climate and many other considerations are such as to put them in a class far ahead of the "Garden of Old Ontario."

At Kelowna there are many large orchards nearly as old and quite the equal of the great orchards at Vernon and those at Armstrong and Enderby, Okanagan points not on the lake, but of older settlement. At Peachland the results of five or six years of tree culture have been referred to. At Summerland a visit to Prairie Valley, only one of the sections of the settlement, is like a peep into paradise. In fact any one wanting something better in the way of paradise than is to be found in the Okanagan, deserves no paradise.

Millionaire's Row.

"Millionaire's Row" at Summerland is the local name for one driveway between three-year-old peach orchards of wonderfully thrifty growth, and which will next year bear the first crop. There, side by side, are seen plantations owned by Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, R. B. Angus, E. B. Osler and other C.P.R. magnates, while resident is R. H. Agur, who is the first to build a country home of size and beauty to quite equal those of England or the old colonials of the Southern States.

Messrs. Shatford have about completed the second season in the great work of developing the Ellis estate, a magnificent demesne of 30,000 acres, which is being sold in small holdings of two to ten acres, and set out in peach, apple and other trees and irrigated by a system of ditches and pipes now being installed. The other settlements mentioned, above have all had an irrigation system for some time. Kamloops district has some irrigation development also. the Canadian Real Properties Co. having many thousands of acres to develop. Keremeos and the Similkaneen await rail communication before they can grow. One other interior district. that of Grand Forks, in the Boundary. might be mentioned in addition to those enumerated discursively above. Here an old settlement has been rejuvenated by irrigation, the land has been divided into small holdings and planted with trees, irrigation has been provided and with a perfect climate large development has been made. Isolated from an outside market, to great extent, this section has found ready sale in the home mining camps surrounding it, for all the produce of ranch and orchard.

In the near future the Province of British Columbia is destined to supply not only all its own local demand for fruits, but that of the provinces of the Northwest, shuting out almost entirely the large importations from the States of Washington, Oregon and California. There is a day not far distant, when the citrus fruits of California will be the only fruit importations into Western Canada, where now many cars are brought in every year, comprising all varieties of fruits grown in B. C.

The Consuming Middle West

The people of the three prairie provinces are large consumers of fruit, practically all of which has to be brought in from the other provinces and from the United States.

Winter apples are brought in almost entirely from Ontario and British Columbia, very few Maritime Provinces apples coming so far west. Quebec supplies the greater part of the Fameuse or Snow apples consumed in the west. Until recent years the Province of Ontario had a practical monopoly of the supply of Winter apples but recently the British Columbia fruit has become a strong factor in the market. Fruit men say that the British Columbia apples are more uniform in quality, but opinions differ as to the relative flavors of the apples from the two provinces. Generally speaking, it may be said that the British Columbia fruit growers show more care in packing than do the fruit growers in Ontario.

Ontario and British Columbia supply a good part of the small fruits, such as currants, gooseberries, plums and pears, but in these fruits there is considerable competition with imports from the United States. Fruit men in Winnipeg complain of the slight attention given to the packing of these fruits by Ontario shippers.

In an interview a few months ago with The Canadian Grocer, K. J. Johnston, of Bright & Johnston, wholesale fruit dealers in Winnipeg, dwelt at length upon this point.

Big Loss Every Season.

"Ontario currants and gooseberries," said he, "always come to this market packed only in market baskets and there is a big loss every season. The fruit is packed about as carefully as one would pack potatoes. Currants and gooseberries should be packed in small strawberry boxes and shipped in strawberry crates.

"As to pears, tomatoes and peaches," he continued, "they should be wrapped separately in paper and packed tightly in baskets or crates in the same way that California fruits are packed. Ontario tomatoes come here in baskets with green and ripe fruit mixed indiscriminately; the consequence is that the hard green tomatoes crush the ripe ones and about half of what comes to Winnipeg from Ontario is damaged in this way.

"Pears are often shipped out here in cars with other goods and they are badly bruised when they arrive. The Ontario shippers must pay more attention to careful and scientific packing if they want to extend or even hold their business in this market."

From the above interview it may readily be seen that there is considerable dissatisfaction among fruit men with the manner in which the Ontario shipper packs his fruit. By lack of sufficient attention to the packing the Ontario growers and shippers are losing a big western trade in small fruits. British Columbia shippers as a rule are more particular in this respect and put their small fruits on the market in a neat package which helps very much in selling it. But even the British Columbia shippers do not pay the same attention to packing that their California rivals do, with the result that California small fruits are sold in large quantities in the west.

Measure of the Business.

Winnipeg houses handle the bulk of the fruit sold in the west, but wholesale firms in Brandon, Moose Jaw, Regina, Calgary, Lethbridge, Edmonton and other points are beginning to develop a considerable trade. It is estimated that Winnipeg houses import California oranges and lemons each year to the value of about $342,000, and the outside firms are also large direct buyers. These figures given The Canadian Grocer by the representative of one of the California orange growers' exchanges give some idea of the extent of the market.

Nova Scotia Orchards

The fruit growers of the Annapolis and Cornwallis Valleys are now busy packing their apples, and the warehouses all along the line of the Dominion Atlantic Railway present a scene of great activity. Many of the apple growers of Annapolis are packing fruit for the South African market. This fruit is being put up in bushel boxes and half-barrels with very attractive steverlings. Quite a fruit trade is being worked up with South Africa and when the fruit arrives in good condition high prices are obtained. The cold storage facilities greatly aids the fruit grower in his shipments to Africa.

The Nova Scotia apple crop this season will in quantity be about the same as last year, when 325,000 barrels were exported to foreign markets. In quality the crop is fair. Gravensteins are a failure. In regard to prices it is not expected that these will be quite as high as last year, when an average of $2.75 per barrel was netted, but the returns will be good. Recent advices from England are that the crop, which at one time promised to be very abundant, has been materially diminished through drought and gales, while the recent hot weather has caused it to mature quickly, so that it will not keep well, and the fruit will be off the market earlier than usual. Prices in New York will be higher than at the corresponding time last year. In Nova Scotia prices are advancing. Buyers who began paying $1.50 per barrel earlier in the season, are now offering $2.00 per barrel in some ases for the run of orchard fruit.

Value of the Western Market to Ontario —An Undeveloped Possibility—Question of Packing—The Storm and the Orchards.

A fruit man recently returned to Toronto from Winnipeg says the Ontario growers of small fruits are loosing the greatest kind of an opportunity by not giving the attention they should to the markets of the Middle West by packing their fruit to compare with that from British Columbia and the United States.

"The Ontario growers," he said, "will continue to pack their fruit in baskets and the lower tiers get damaged in transport. In British Columbia, California and Washington, the fruit is packed in crates. These are solid and insure a free circulation of air and the fruit arrives in excellent condition.

"Ontario can beat them in flavor; the majority of people in Manitoba are from Ontario, at anyrate from the east, and have a preference for Canadian fruit. There are very nearly a million people between Lake Superior and the Rockies. They must have fruit and they won't stick at the price.

"If Ontario growers cultivate that market and sent what it would take it would improve the home market at least 10 per cent. Their gains at home would more than pay the freight charges on the shipments to the west."

The market for cranberries is advancing, due, it is said, to excessive demand. Nothing like the prices of last year, when the top was about $18, are, however, anticipated. The crop is estimated this year as follows: Cape Cod, 240 to 260 thousand barrels; New Jersey, 240 to 300 thousand bushels; Wisconsin, 40,000 barrels. As yet but 52,000 barrels of the Cape Cod crop have been shipped, and nothing from other districts. The Wisconsin crop was only 22,000 barrels last year. It is felt that in view of the large stock ahead the price will not advance a great deal.

Trade generally is very active. The Ontario crop is about over, but grapes of fine quality continue to arrive. The first Almeria grapes have arrived and are selling at $6 a barrel.

Sweet potatoes are cheaper. So are turnips and citrons. Green beans are past.

TORONTO.

FRUIT—The fruit market has closed for the season. Though a good many grapes, it is reported, were lost by the snowstorm last week, fruit of fine quality is arriving. Prices are somewhat advanced. Oranges are somewhat cheaper all round. Lemons are easier. The new crop won't be in till the end of the month and in the meantime the trade is getting on with Verdillis and Californian.

Canadian plums are off the market but another car of Toledo prunes was received this week. Peaches are higher. Cranberries have advanced half a dollar a barrel. Almeria grapes are on the market and are selling at $6 a barrel.

VEGETABLES—Shipments of potatoes from New Brunswick are not as free as formerly and the opinion is held here that eastern growers are manoeuvring for a higher price. The price is unchanged. Carlots are quoted at 70c. a bag. Spanish onions are easier. Canadian onions, it is said here, will be higher owing to short crop. Tomatoes are firmer. Some continue to come in, but the frost pretty nearly finished the crop. Turnips are quoted lower. Citrons, too, are in larger supply. Sweet potatoes are considerably lower.

NOT MUCH DAMAGE.

By Snow and Wind Last Week—Grapes For Ten Days.

In reply to a question as to the damage to the Niagara district orchards by the snow and wind storm last week, Robt. Thompson, St. Catharines, one of the best informed men in the district, writes that from the ridge to the lake (in this area are growing nine-tenths of the small fruit trees of the Niagara Peninsular) no serious damage followed: not any more than from many of our heavy wind storms that occur two or three times a year. In this area little or no snow gathered at any point more than one inch in depth. But from the ridge to the foot of the mountain snow gathered to the depth of four inches, and orchards in this strip suffered considerably, many limbs being broken off and in many cases every limb being broken. Peach trees suffered most. On the mountain, in Welland County, snow gathered to a greater depth and as a result more trees suffered. But I am pleased to say that to the outside public the results from damage will never be noticeable. The frost of the night of the 11th inst. killed the bulk of the tomato vines, although many tomatoes underneath are still sound and good and marketable. Grapes did not suffer, as the frost only touched the tips of the leaves and graperies look nearly as fresh as ever. Grapes will be good for another ten days.

Bernard & Laporte is the name of a new wine and spirit firm which has been established in Montreal. The partners, J. H. Bernard and J. O. Laporte, are experienced in the wine and liquor business and have been able to secure several fine agencies from European houses. Mr. Bernard has had some years experience in France, while Mr. Laporte has traveled for various liquor firms in Montreal for some years. The new firm is located at 253 and 255 St. Paul street.

J. Lougheed, Tullamore, has sold his business to W. J. Simpson. Mr. Lougheed is retiring after 25 years of very active commercial life, and as he is still young at 60 he has a long evening for the enjoyment of his well-earned leisure.

CUBAN TOBACCO GROWING: HAVANA CIGARS

Did you ever give a thought to the stock of cigars which you probably have, other than what had to do with their sale? Take one cigar and think over it for a while. It is really surprising how few know anything about the growth of tobacco and its manufacture. Cigar manufacturing is becoming a great industry in Canada, and it is surely up to us Canadians to have some inside knowledge of the business. There are various factories turning out various goods in various ways, so that it would be difficult to consider the whole question at once. But take one line, say the Havana cigar, because it is so much in demand, and follow it from the time the tobacco is grown in a Cuban field, until the cigar is sold behind the counter of a Canadian dealer, and you will learn much that is interesting, and will know more about the goods you are handling.

The First Step.

As everybody knows, Cuba is distinguished from other countries by two industries—sugar and tobacco. Practically the whole of the cultivated area of the island is taken up with sugar and tobacco plantations. There are any number of plantations in Cuba given entirely to the growing of the tobacco from which our Havana cigars are made.

Seeding time, when the fields are planted, is the latter part of August and the early part of September each year. This year, owing to political disturbances, the fields were neglected altogether during August and September, no seeding at all being done. It was not until the first of this month that efforts were made to get next year's crop under way. Cigar manufacturers were beginning to wonder in what position they would be next year, having no tobacco, and no prospects of any. At the time of writing, however, the outlook is fairly bright, since seeding is going on apace. But the tobacco in 1907 will not be of the same quality as in previous years, because growers will be caught napping in the rainy season. This cannot now be helped, and manufacturers accept the situation philosophically, being glad to have the prospect of obtaining any tobacco at all.

Buyers Examining Tobacco in Havana Warehouse.

Picking and Curing the Tobacco.

It is the end of February, and often the end of March, before the tobacco is ready to pick. The location of the plantation, the year, climatic and other conditions have their influence upon tobacco in growth, so that no stated time can be given as the period when it is ready for picking. The best tobacco is grown on the slopes, the rain draining off better, and the soil being apparently richer, than in the valleys or low-lying lands. The sun, too, influences the tobacco more in such a situation. The very best tobacco is produced in the fertile Vuelta Abajo district of Cuba.

Proper Curing.

Possibly it is not generally known that a great deal depends upon the proper curing of the tobacco when it is picked. In fact the quality of the tobacco, and therefore the price it will bring, depends upon the attention given to the curing. The tobacco is laid in the sun and allowed to get mellow. Some planters give more care to this process than do others, turning the tobacco every hour perhaps, while others would turn it but daily. Upon the curing depends the producing of the different shades or colors, some seventy in number, but chiefly five: Claro, Colorado Claro, Colorado Maduro, and Maduro and Oscuro. Maduro is the Spanish for ripe, while Oscuro means very dark.

How Tobacco is Packed.

When the curing process is finished, the tobacco is gathered and packed into what are known as hands, fifty to seventy-five leaves arranged together. Four of these hands are tied together with native grass in such a manner as to make a compact parcel called a carot. There are eighty of these carots in a bale, to wrap which the bark of a native tree is used. When the tobacco is sold each bale is wrapped in an air-tight canvas package, and it is then ready for shipment to any part of the world.

First Process in Manufacture.

Casing is the first step in the cigar factory. By this is meant that when a bale is opened, one carot or more is taken out and placed in water to soak over night, to make it soft and pliable. This must be done every evening, so that the next day's supply of tobacco may be prepared. For this reason in Cuba it is understood that whenever the cigarmakers contemplate going on strike they must give one day's notice to the manufacturer. After casing, the stem is taken out of each leaf by girls specially employed for this purpose. This is called stripping. The selector now has his say.

Duties of the Selector.

Whether a cigar manufacturer shall make or lose money depends very largely upon his selector. It is this man's duty to select the tobacco and decide in which class each and every leaf shall be placed. He must decide whether a leaf is suitable for use in making a cigar to sell at $35, or whether it should go into the manufacture of a line to sell at $500. It will be seen that he must have a thorough knowledge of tobacco, and his responsibility is great. But there are compensations. The selector is the best paid man in the factory, making $50 a week, if he is any good at all. The leaves, as he sorts them, are made into rough pads, and these pass into the hands of the cigarmakers.

Making of the Cigar.

To watch an expert cigarmaker at his trade is a pleasure. He must be a good man to give satisfaction. Some factories use machinery to a greater or less extent in their work, while other manufacturers turn out nothing but hand-made goods. And some of the hand-workers can turn out the cigars and do it artistically. In the rolling of the cigars the work is simple to watch, but difficult to perform without experience. There is what is called the filler, comprising the tobacco leaves first wrapped up. Then there is the wrapper, a fine-looking leaf forming the outside cover of the cigar. The cigarmakers are paid so much per thousand cigars, and they turn out one hundred and fifty or more a day.

Finishing Touches.

After they are made the cigars are banded and packed, ten, twenty-five, fifty or a hundred, into the artistically labelled boxes which we well know, and are then taken out and sold by the travelers. And this brings the cigar to the merchant's counter or show case. It will thus be seen that the innocent-looking Havana cigar is the product of much time and labor.

Fourteen Years and Still in Use

That's what this man say's about the Bowser Perfect Self-Measuring Oil Tanks.

Stanhope, N.J., March 24, 1906.

S. F. Bowser & Co.,
255 Atlantic Ave, Boston, Mass.

Gentlemen :—

I want to buy a gasolene storage outfit. I think the one of which I enclose circular will be what I want, what will the cost be to me ?

I desire to say that I have been using one of your old model kerosene tanks for fourteen years' continuous use and have never had a leak or any trouble with it of any kind, and it gives just as good service to-day as it did the first day I used it, and from all appearances it will last another fourteen years. Let me know in reference to gasolene tank at your earliest convenience, and oblige,

Yours truly,
H. A. TIMBRELL.

Isn't that the kind of oil tank you want? For price and other information send for catalog.

What is Your Book-Keeper's Time Worth?

BUSINESS SYSTEMS LIMITED SYSTEM THE SECRET OF SUCCESS
TORONTO.

Is your ledger arranged on any special system?

Ten minutes wasted six times a day looking for an account means a daily loss of one hour. On a ten hour day, this means a loss of a month a year.

And your book-keeper has more than six accounts a day to look up.

Can you afford it?

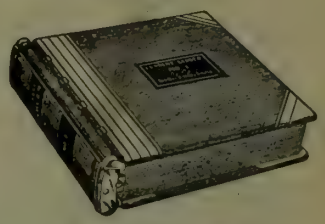
* * * * * *

Business Systems ledgers are all built on the loose-leaf principle.

Business Systems make your ledger accounts run alphabetically; if an account runs over the space you gave it, you merely drop in another leaf.

Business Systems loose-leaf ledgers open perfectly flat and give a level writing surface.

Write us today for full particulars.



This will not obligate you in any way and will enable us to tell you exactly how Business Systems may be most economically applied to your accounting department.

Fifteen years ago we introduced in Canada the now universal method of accounting by perpetual books.

For six hundred years previous to our invention, accounts—and there were accounts before that period, even from the day the world began—were kept in bound books, either on parchment or paper.

It is easy from this to understand what we have done to simplify the work of record keeping by changing from bound to perpetual books, but you must enquire into our new systems to appreciate what an advancement has recently been made toward further simplifying and making perfect the art of modern accountancy.

We make systems for every business, wholesale or retail, or for any concern or profession where record keeping is demanded.

Write to us stating your business. It will give us an opportunity to let you know what we have designed to facilitate your particular work.

Malaga Raisins Seeded

An article appearing in last week's GROCER is evidently inspired by the selfish narrow-mindedness of the would-be monopolist. We, however, believe that and are willing to allow the consuming public to judge of the excellence of the Malaga Raisin seeded. The rich and delicate lusciousness of flavor and tenderness of skin, readily digested, will commend the Malaga Seeded Raisin to the consumers as the only fruit to use. The up-to-date grocer will study his interests and please his trade by introducing to them the Malaga Seeded Raisin.

The price is reasonable, the fruit is prepared by the latest improved machinery, carefully packed and attractively put by, only, by

Wholesale Grocers TORONTO and PETERBORO

QUEBEC EXPANSION.

Conditions in the flour and feed section of Quebec City trade are more satisfactory than some little time ago, due to more than average crops, assured prosperity, and the general favorable sentiment resulting from C.P.R. steamers and the beginning of the new bridge. This is evidenced in no better way than the decided expansion in the trade of many firms. None can show a more striking growth than that of C. A. Paradis, 81 Dalhousie street, whose business (though but two years established under his own name) has long passed the experimental stage.

Although young in years, Mr. Paradis has had ten years experience in the general flour and feed trade and has already established a splendid connection, due to strict integrity in all dealings, coupled with exceptional facilities and a good deal of earnest, hard work. In fact he goes so far as to make his business his pleasure, supervising all departments, though by no means a "do it all" man.

A Grocer representative was recently shown through his premises, noting his large warehouses for flour, feed, grain, hay, provisions, and general produce, and fish of all kinds as well as groceries.

Right back of commodious offices is a large brick warehouse 160x40 feet, amply stored in all its five flats and basement. This is said to be the largest warehouse in the city. At the side of this is another warehouse 40x60 with four flats. These warehouses enable him to give ample accommodation to firms wishing storage and warehouse facilities. His business in this direction is increasing.

He is planning extending his business by handling foreign and domestic agencies in grocery and allied lines. His experience presages success. He is open to receive applications.

GUILD CASES STAND OVER.

The prosecution of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild on the charge of conspiracy will not be gone on with at the forthcoming Hamilton assizes, as it has been found that the agreements between the grocers and manufacturers are practically the same as those disclosed in the prosecution of the druggists at Toronto a few months ago. The druggists have appealed, and the Attorney-General's Department has decided to allow the grocers' case to stand over until the other is settled in the court of appeal.

HERE AND THERE WITH THE TRADE.

The assets of Scannell Bros. & Cooke, grocers, Ottawa, are to be sold on the 23rd inst.

The stock of Sibbald & Stewart, Gravenhurst, was advertised for sale by auction on the 17th inst.

St. Clair Balfour, the wholesale grocer, of Hamilton, has returned from an extended visit in Winnipeg.

Joel Goodrick, Wheatley, has assigned to Arthur M. Wilson, and a meeting of creditors is called for the 23rd.

Jos. Giguere, Hebertville, has assigned, and Lefaivre & Taschereau have been appointed provisional guardians.

Before the Grain Commission, Mr. L. Goldie, of Guelph, suggested that all grain elevators be put under Government control.

F. A. Wilson, grocer, St. Catharines, is making some improvements to his store. Among other things he is installing some silent salesmen cases.

SALESMEN WANTED.

TWO experienced salesmen wanted on a commission basis; will be given exclusive territory. A first-class contract will be made with salesmen of good address and character who can sell high-grade specialties. Address, Toledo Computing Scale Company, Hamilton, Ont.

Large Soap Sales

Don't try to sell soaps that are unknown—it's hard work and unprofitable labor.

The best selling soap is the best known soap, and the best known soap is the one which is advertised the most extensively and is at the same time absolutely pure and of high quality.

Baby's Own Soap

is the most extensively advertised soap in Canada—it is absolutely pure and is known throughout Canada as the best soap for the Nursery, Toilet and the Bath, because of its rare quality. It is not surprising that it sells easily and in very large quantities. You cannot afford to let your customers go elsewhere to buy Baby's Own Soap.

A Few Short Weeks.

In a few short weeks of holiday buying quality is criticized more carefully than usual, you'll agree to that. If the time ever was when quality cut more figure than price, it is at just such a time. You can't wait to stock up when the time comes, because, when a woman wants a thing, she wants it right then and there. It pays to be prepared. It will pay you, and extremely well, to ask your wholesaler now for the high-grade.

"Griffin" Brand Dried Fruits.

"Better and better" is the motto of the "Griffin" Brand, the brand that made California Dried Fruits famous.

The Nibble of a Mouse will eventually consume the biggest cheese, and the loss of pennies, nickels, dimes and dollars, if it don't "bust" the biggest business, will reduce the profit to an alarming extent. And you're bound to lose more or less if you do a credit business, and depend on ledger balances taken from the day-book. Throw out your day-books and other time-wasting devices, and adopt the modern Allison Coupon System

IF A MAN WANTS CREDIT

for $10, give him a $10 Allison Coupon Book, charge him with $10, and there you are. No trouble at all. If he buys a plug of tobacco for ten cents, just tear off a ten-cent coupon—that's all. And so on for all his purchases up to limit of the book. NO PASS BOOK. NO WRITING. NO TIME LOST. NO KICKING. There are other Coupon Books, of course, but why not have the best? FIRST GROCERY WITHOUT SCALES

Store Stocked Only With Package Goods Opened in New York—Views of a Prominent Grocer Regarding the Package.

The first retail grocery store in Greater New York to be operated without counters or scales has opened its doors on Main street, Flushing, under the proprietorship of Charles Bartlett, a grocer who has had much experience in catering to high-class trade. The idea is to sell goods only in bottles, cans, cartons or packages. There is no weighing of anything for the reason that no bulk goods are sold. Teas, coffees and other grocery articles are sold in the packages as received, with the manufacturer's or jobber's guarantee as to quality and weight.

While a number of the larger manufacturers and jobbers yesterday disclaimed any knowledge of such a movement, says the New York Journal of Commerce of Friday last, it has been persistently rumored in the trade for some days past that if the Bartlett store proved a success a company with large capital would be organized to start similar stores in various parts of the city where the demand is for goods of guaranteed quality, scientifically packed and free from all impurities.

The claim has been made that the general run of retail grocers here were bitterly opposed to the package idea, and preferred to handle goods in bulk form wherever possible, believing the possibilities of profit therein to be much larger. The better class of grocers in this city deny this. They realize, they say, that the grocery business is in a state of evolution. The tin can, glass jar and oiled paper are the overturning influences acting upon the old-time grocery trade. The customer at retail wants his goods delivered to him in a package. The manufacturer and jobber in "straight" goods encourage the idea. The retail grocer finds a simplified business, a cleaner, surer profit and the minimum of time and labor in dispensing these package goods to his customers. It is the age of the illustrated, printed package in the grocery business, and, with the introduction of one package to a new line of commodity, the grocer feels the pressure of demand for packages for half a dozen other lines that have not been adapted to box, jar or carton.

Sanitation in Manufacture and Sale.

Among those who are firm in the belief that package groceries have come to stay is R. C. Brandon, who is one of the recognized mentors of the retail grocers of the Middle and Southwest, and whose opinions carry weight with the trade in all parts of the country. Discussing the sanitary era in the manufacture and sale of food products, he says:

"Without doubt cleanliness and sanitation have been the greatest forces leading to this evolution of the package grocery store. The consumer, with his knowledge of germs and their menace, his disposition to fear adulterants, and always his repugnance against the unnecessary handling of the things he has to eat, caused him to lead, rather than to follow, the idea of the package, with the name of the packer stamped upon the outward covering. This acknowledged source of a packed commodity carried an assurance with it which no grocer's parcel in brown paper ever had given the customer. Then in the same measure, this same package relieved the dispensing grocer of the authority for its excellence. With only these things in favor of the package the evolution of the grocery business was made plain.

"But in a hundred other ways the old time grocer, looking on at the package business in the modern grocery store, may see where his old methods were more than archaic by comparison.

"The grocer selling in packages, first of all, has an absolute assurance against the inaccuracies of the average clerk who handles weights and measures. This clerk is not a scholarly, systematic man. He may be tired out late in a long day. If he makes a mistake on the scales and gives out too much, he cheats the house of profits; if he weighs too little he is almost as likely to antagonize the customer and lose the trade for his house. At the best, and at all times, the customer, looking on, expects to see the scale register the proverbial 'down weight,' and this may mean one pennyweight or two ounces — all dependent upon the clerk or upon the clerk's mood and attention.

"Thus in weighing alone the proprietor of a grocery store dealing along the lines of case goods, never was certain that even the law of averages would keep him on the right side of reasonable profit. The eleven eggs in a bag, which should have held a dozen; a pound of crackers, full weight, but with half the squares broken and dog-eared; a parcel improperly wrapped, which on the way to a customer would burst open, spilling half the contents—these conditions in the business of the old-time grocer left him especially open to the suggestion of the package trade.

Heavy Losses on Bulk Goods.

"Considering the old-time grocery store, it might be said that three-fourths of all the goods he handled in bulk were subject to a legitimate loss in weight, and to this extent a deterioration in quality and flavor. But this illegitimate loss that came first through a short count from the jobber and later through the petty shoplifting of the loafing, inquiring, but non-purchasing 'customer,' was a terror to the average small grocer. These losses made his business as much a guess as the package trade makes it a certainty.

"It may be set down as certain that if ever the package grocery ceases for any reason to exist, it will be against the strenuous, hard fighting of the package grocery keeper. When package groceries have evolved to include every line handled by the grocer—if that shall be possible—the package grocer will have the simplest, surest business in the world. It will be possible for him to make an almost absolute statement of his condition of business every night in the week.

Name Must Carry Guarantee.

"Package goods carrying the name of the producer or jobber or retailer are the goods par excellence of the present and of the future. The guarantee of the packer must go with every package. This is an implied condition upon which the customer will insist. A man may go to John Smith's grocery store and buy a commodity from a bulk case, taking it home to find it distinctly second class. Yet he may use this commodity to the end of its common brown bag, unmarked, while if the stuff had been in a cardboard carton bearing the name of John Smith, the goods would have been returned with indignant protest.

"It is in handling the package goods that the grocer finds his protection against the operation of the food laws. Goods coming in an original package from the manufacturer or his agents and sold in that package by the retail grocer leaves the grocer free of legal entanglements if the goods shall have been adulterated. If goods are bought in bulk and weighed and sold by the grocer at retail, the customer finding short weight or adulteration has recourse against the grocer.

Spice Trade Proves Point.

"No plainer showing of the responsibility of the firms packing groceries can be shown than has been marked in the spice trade in the last fifteen years. In 1890 at least 65 per cent. of all spices were sold in bulk, much of it was ground, and even more of it adulterated. To-day virtually all spices are in packages, ground, and in the grinding and packing and labeling of these spices the public has its chief assurance that it is getting the best that the market affords. Few people to-day would buy ground spices from a bulk can, and nobody who buys his whole spices with the intent to grind them himself can feel that he is getting any better commodity than is served in packages by a responsible manufacturer of spices who expects to remain successfully in business.

Packages Have Come to Stay.

"Package groceries have come to stay. Cleanliness, sanitary precaution and celerity in the retail business will insist upon the retention of the package. And because of this demand for package groceries the producer and jobber are to be held to the chalk line of honest weights, values and flavors."

TAKEN INTO PARTNERSHIP.

The flour, grain and provision business in Montreal which has been carried on by H. J. Stevens will now be conducted by the firm of Stevens & Miller, Mr. Stevens having taken into partnership W. H. D. Miller. Mr. Miller was for a number of years connected with the C. P. R. freight department in Toronto and Montreal, leaving that company to take charge of the transportation department of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. Later he went with Davies, Limited, and became their Montreal manager. The business will be carried on at the old quarters, in the Board of Trade Building.

WINDOW AND INTERIOR DISPLAY

Best Method of Making Price Cards—A Goderich Store Interior—The Money-Making Window Display.

It is surprising how often an otherwise attractive window is spoiled by slovenly price-cards. Although it may be still an undecided question as to whether price-marked windows or those left unmarked are the more profitable, there can at least be no doubt that when the prices are displayed, it should be in a manner calculated to please the onlooker.

The use of stencils and rubber stamps is one of the points which should be most carefully watched. In some cases these are the real labor savers they are intended to be, and do good work, but in many others they are highly objectionable. The main drawback to their use is the lack of variety available. In an up-to-date printing office new type faces are always appearing, and the old are discarded—for a time, or for ever, as the case may be. In the case of these price-markers such a course is practically impossible. The same stencil letter which was used thirty-five years ago is on sale to-day—and nobody kicks. The demand does not warrant the manufacturers introducing new styles, and it is perhaps well that it does not, for the stencil card is perhaps the poorest looking thing that can be put in a window. Rubber stamps are slightly better, there being some variety in the recognized forms of letter. But it seldom occurs to the storekeeper to ask for something new, the stamp maker doesn't seek to introduce it, and both are content with the same old thing. In countries like Europe and the United States there is, of course, a larger demand, and new letters occasionally appear. Since these

A GODERICH INTERIOR.

This picture is from a photograph of part of the grocery department of McEwen Bros., Hamilton street, Goderich. The two gentlemen shown in the centre are the members of the firm, Will and Bert, the latter late of St. George, Ont. Farther down the row stands J. J. McEwen, proprietor of the grocery of that name on the "Square." J. J. has been nearly five years in Goderich now, succeeding T. G. Tipling in the old D. C. Strachan stand. He was formerly in Teeswater. Both the McEwen stores do a big business; the one shown in the picture is the "Maple Leaf" grocery, of which George M. Elliott was proprietor for fifteen years previous to March last, and has in connection a very fine "China Hall."

The illustration shows that the brothers have taken considerable thought for the arrangement and display of their stock.

cannot be obtained otherwise, it is well worth while for the merchant who must use rubber stamps to make inquiries outside of Canada. A change in lettering costs the storekeeper infinitely less than it is worth to him.

Almost as bad as lack of variety is the carelessness with which stamps and stencils are used. In the majority of stores this work is handed over to someone having practically no idea of the proper way to perform it. There is a right and a wrong way to use stamps or stencils, and in nine cases out of ten the wrong way is chosen. Too much or too thick ink is allowed to clog the stencil and blur the card, while with rubber stamps too little ink is frequently used and the letter is only half printed. Letters are not properly aligned; s's are turned upside down; u's are used for n's, and vice-versa; the letters "l" and "I" and the figure "1" are confused; smudgy obliterations and corrections are allowed, and the finished card, sloppy and slovenly, is placed in the window to annoy instead of pleasing the prospective customer.

J. M. THOM,
Prize Window Dresser.

It may be impossible for every store to have a man capable of lettering good cards by hand, but there is a man in every store who can use the rubber stamp properly if he works carefully and uses his common sense.

The price-card in connection with the grocery store, especially in window displays, is worth thinking about, and the subject will be dealt with further next week in this department.

Have you ever tried colored lights for your evening window display? asks the Retail Grocers' Advocate. The attractiveness of many displays is greatly enhanced at night by the soft, rich tone added from a deep red or green light, and many striking and very beautiful effects are easily made.

There are a number of simple methods by which you can color your own lights to any shade desired. One of these is the alum solution. Make a strong solution of alum water, and after carefully cleaning your globe dip it in the solution. Have a rack to dry them on, and dry slowly and evenly. This gives you the plain white, frosted globe. By adding cochineal, you have a red solution; tumeric makes a yellow; indigo a blue; a mixture of tumeric and indigo a royal purple.

It may be necessary to dip the globes several times that they may have an even coating.

Another good way is to color a bottle of mucilage and carefully coat the globes with same.

If the colored lights have not been extensively used in your district try them at once, and you will be quickly convinced that they are most effective in attracting the crowds that throng the streets in the evening.

PRIZE WINDOW DRESSER.

Winner of The Canadian Grocer Competition.

J. M. Thom, whose dressing of Gibbons Bros.' windows, Toronto, won the first prize in The Canadian Grocer's New Year competition, is 23 years old. He began work as messenger boy in a grocery in 1894 at $1.50 a week, going to school and working the rest of the day till bedtime. That was before the early closing movement. He has changed employers a number of times since, but when making choice of a place to seek a position he always selected neat, well arranged, up-to-date looking stores. He has been in his present position over a year and without previous training has taken entire charge of the window dressing and interior decoration and arrangement of the stock. He has had numerous applications to dress windows of stores in other lines in his neighborhood and is now looking after confectionery, cigar, stationery and hardware windows, which occupies half his evenings. Mr. Thom is married and has assumed the whole duty of citizenship. He is ambitious to become a professional window dresser.

APPOINTED MANAGER.

W. H. Seyler, Eastern Representative, Assumes Charge of Canadian Grocer.

(From the Canadian Printer and Publisher.)

W. H. Seyler, for the past three years eastern manager of The Canadian Grocer, with headquarters at Montreal, has been promoted to the general management of the paper at the head office in Toronto, succeeding D. B. Gillies, who has resigned to go to the Northwest.

Mr. Seyler's name is a familiar one, not only in newspaper circles but in the grocery trade as well. His connection with the trade began in 1878, when he entered the establishment of Alex. Harvey & Co., Hamilton. Three years later he moved to New York, becoming entry clerk in the warehouse of Francis H. Leggett & Co., then as now one of the largest wholesale grocery houses in the United States. A year later he accepted a position in the foreign freight department of the Erie Railway, soon after being promoted to the Boston branch. After a short service there he became chief clerk in the Pennsylvania R. R. office in Boston, staying with this road for five years, until compelled by ill health to return to his native country. He came to Toronto and joined the sample room staff of the Eby, Blain Co., becoming in time sample room manager. Here he remained for ten years. After leaving the Eby, Blain Co., Mr. Seyler made a year's trip through Quebec and the Maritime Provinces for F. F. Dalley Co., and on his return to Toronto became sales manager of E. W. Gillett Co. In 1903 he joined the staff of The Canadian Grocer.

For many years prior to becoming immediately connected with The Grocer, Mr. Seyler was a valued contributor to its columns, writing on many important themes, especially the art of successful advertising. He has also made his mark as a designer of advertising.

His departure from the Montreal office of the MacLean Publishing Co. was much regretted by the staff there, who expressed their appreciation of his worth by presenting him with a handsome traveling bag.

W. H. SEYLER,
Manager Canadian Grocer.

CIVICS.

Two months more and the municipalities of Ontario will be involved in the excitement of the annual elections. Municipal government in Ontario is not corrupt; it is only inefficient. Some good people profess a preference for a capable and corrupt rather than an incapable and honest administration. It's a matter of choice; but why have either? If the business men, the storekeepers, of the province would do their duty as citizens, there would be an administration both honest and efficient in every municipality.

This does not mean that the merchants of Ontario should hog the public offices. There are legions of successful business men who would fail utterly as municipal representatives. The first thing a business man should do who wants to serve his country municipally, is not to run for office but to get really interested in the affairs of his municipality. The rest is easy. The thoroughly interested man is going to see that he is capably represented. In almost every council there are some representatives of capacity sufficient to merit retention. The rest should be replaced by the most efficient men available.

The first problem always is how to get such reform going. The boards of trade should make the move. Take Toronto, for instance, and not a place in Ontario at this moment is more in need of applied business principles and business foresight and acumen in the direction of its affairs. The present administration is lamentably weak. The trouble lies primarily with the calible of the aldermen who year after year get themselves elected to council. If a strong board of aldermen were once installed, the problem of mayor and controllers would quickly resolve itself into a mere matter of seniority.

The board of trade is the organized larger business interests of the city. It is fitting that the board take the initiative. It should call a meeting of the representatives of every business organization in the city. If such a body working in harmony made careful and wise selection of candidates for mayor, aldermen, controllers and school trustees, then got in behind them and worked, they could elect every man of them.

It is important that the board of trade should not attempt the work alone. Every business interest should as far as possible be represented, but the board is the only organization in a position to take the initiative.

BUSINESS ETIQUETTE.

The manager of our London office recently received an inquiry from an English advertiser as to the status of a Canadian firm who answered one of his advertisements and placed an order amounting to some $50 or more. Although this was the first transaction, no remittance was enclosed nor references given, and the letter was mailed without the necessary stamp, so that excess postage was demanded on delivery.

We have reason to think that the firm who sent this order is a desirable customer, but we question if the order referred to will ever be filled. British houses look askance at such breaches of business etiquette and courtesy, and we have known cases where such letters have been exhibited to other houses as examples of unbusinesslike Canadian methods.

Surely in asking credit a buyer should endeavor to make the best impression possible on the manufacturer from whom goods are required.

HOGS MORE PLENTIFUL.

The publication by the Department of Trade and Commerce in October of a report made by the Canadian High Commissioner, Lord Strathcona, in March, is not very rapid work. On another page are to be found some remarks by a large produce house he quotes. They are interesting now because the conditions there spoken of seem to have neared an end. Last week's deliveries of live hogs in Canada were heavier than for a twelve-month and packers instead of competing turned down orders and prices broke, quotations this week being reported as much as 25 to 40 cents below the set prices.

While for months the packing houses in Canada have been operating considerably less than their capacity because of the shortage of hogs, the business seems to be in a pretty healthy condition. Competition for the raw product has been allayed to some extent. The outlook is for pretty free deliveries of hogs during the remainder of the year.

WINNIPEG LEADS.

Winnipeg business men showed last week that they are thoroughly alive to their civic responsibilities and that they realize the absolute necessity of inducing capable business men to stand as candidates at the approaching municipal elections. The Board of Trade took the initiative and called a meeting to which were invited representatives from various business and professional organizations in the city. An enumeration of the bodies represented shows the importance of the gathering. In addition to the Board of Trade representatives there were present at the meeting delegates from the Grain Exchange, the Medical Association, the Real Estate Exchange, Winnipeg Builders' Exchange, Printers' Board of Trade, Manufacturers' Association, Bankers' Association, Western Wholesale Brokers' Association, Northwest Commercial Travelers' Association, Licensed Victuallers' Association, and the Trades and Labor Council.

This gathering comprised many of the leading business and professional men of the city and they met with a common purpose. It was admitted on all sides that a crisis has been reached in Winnipeg's civic administration and that the business of the city has grown so large that it is absolutely necessary for capable business men to stand as candidates for the mayoralty and the Board of Control.

As mentioned in this paper in a previous article, there is a strong movement in favor of the candidacy of Mr. Jas. H. Ashdown for mayor. This meeting of business men passed a resolution promising Mr. Ashdown their support and appointed a committee to wait upon him and endeavor to secure his consent to stand as a candidate. Mr. Ashdown has consented to stand if his nomination is supported by a sufficient number of business men and ratepayers, and there is every reason to hope that he will be the next mayor of Winnipeg. If so, the city is assured of a capable, progressive administration of its affairs.

Winnipeg business men are setting an example to the business men in all the cities and towns of Canada. In too many places the business men shirk their civic responsibility, with the result that municipal business is badly managed. Winnipeg business men have been as neglectful as the business men in other cities, but they have learned by experience and they are now setting an example to the business men in all parts of Canada.

CANADA'S FISH INDUSTRY.

The article in last week's issue, "Fish Business on the Atlantic Coast," by C. H. Whitman, of Canso, N.S., is deserving of careful perusal by everyone interested in the food stuff trade in Canada. Despite the fact that the products of the fisheries last year were over twenty-three and a half million dollars, they are rightly considered one of the Dominion's undeveloped resources. The possibilities along the lines indicated by Mr. Whitman are enormous, as he shows, and there are still on the Pacific, in Hudson's Bay and in the northern inland lakes thousands of square miles of as yet virgin waters.

Another line of development is to increase the consumption of fish, especially salt water fish, within the Dominion. This is largely in the hands of the retailer and it is encouraging to know that within the last five years there has been a marked increase in the consumption of sea fish in Ontario. This tendency should be encouraged in every way possible.

EVERY LITTLE HELPS.

The Canadian Grocer aims to be the newspaper as well as the journal and advocate of the food stuff trade in Canada. Our friends could greatly assist us in this if they would take the trouble to inform us of local happenings of interest to the trade. Send us the facts; we'll do the rest. Anything that interests you as a grocer will interest the trade.

RETURNED DRAFTS.

Much is said of the advantage to a merchant of improving and maintaining his business reputation among those to whom he sells. It is also very important that he be jealous of his reputation among those from whom he buys. Because of this we have drawn attention several times recently to the evil of returned drafts. A firm in Montreal have written us as follows:

"It is with satisfaction that we have read your latest article on 'Returned Drafts,' as we consider that the agitation against this evil cannot be overdone. We ourselves have been sufferers so long that we would like to see continued publicity given to the matter, in order that business firms may in time fully realize the great inconvenience and loss that results ro drawers from inconsiderate returning of drafts for trivial excuses. If the grievance is hard to bear from retailers, the annoyance is double when it happens on the part of wholesalers and manufacturers, who from their experience in such matters should know better. We always make a point of notifying drawees from five to seven days previous to depositing our draft, and furthermore on our statement we guarantee to rectify any discrepancies which may be found in the account. Notwithstanding this we frequently have drafts returned with endorsations such as named in your article.

"We hope that firms who are accustomed to paying for their purchases by sight drafts may come to realize that it is by attention to these matters that a good impression is formed of them, and a sound reputation is built up."

No one can read this letter without being convinced of the seriousness of the writer. It's so easy to return a draft, but if merchants before doing so would put themselves in the place of the man at the other end and consider what he will say when he gets it, the returned drafts, at least for trivial causes, would be fewer.

THEY HELD A PUBLIC MEETING. ING.

At a recent meeting of the Kentville, N.S., Board of Trade they discussed school matters and how Kings County Academy could be raised to the position it once held. "It was moved and seconded," runs the report in the Kentville Chronicle, "that the school committee of the board make arrangements to hold a public meeting in the court house on a future date."

Calling a public meeting is an old-fashioned method of inaugurating reforms and fighting abuses the east is fortunate in not having forgotten. The rest of Canada would be the better for more public meetings and for boards of trade with the public spirit to initiate them.

FINE NEW STORE.

R. F. Miller, Rainbow Centre, is moving this week into his new store. It is built of cement blocks and has a handsome plate glass front. The interior is handsomely fitted. The ceiling is of Georgia pine, grained. The building is heated and lighted with natural gas. Mr. Miller has the post office and telephone office.

WON THE SECOND PRIZE.

Roy Watt, Who Dressed J. F. Pelan's Christmas Window.

The dresser of the second prize Christmas window, the picture of which appeared in last week's issue, was Roy Watt. The window was that of J. F. Pelan, St. Thomas. Mr. Watt has pronounced decorative ability. He is only 18 years of age and had been clerking in the store less than a year when he dressed the window in question. He entered Mr. Pelan's employ in June, 1904, and drove the wagon until the April following. Mr. Pelan says of him: "He has proven himself honest, trustworthy, and a good worker, taking a great interest in the business and has won my perfect confidence." Coupled with perseverence, work and study, Mr. Watt's abilities assure him a bright future.

ROY WATT, St. Thomas.

RUN AWAY MARKET.

The greatest runaway market ever known in California seeded raisins, was how the situation on the coast was described yesterday in a telegram to Eugene Moore, broker, Toronto. Choice fruit is 1¾c. and fancy 2c. above the lowest prices this season.

T. W. Owen, of the Bloomfield Packing Co., was in Toronto this week.

Geo. E. Maybee, of the Canadian Castile Soap Co., Berlin, is in the city. A thorough house-to-house sampling canvass is being made of the city by his assistants.

Markets and Market Notes

QUEBEC MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Fish—Revised.

Evaporated apples—Advanced ½c.

Maple products—Advanced.

Currants—Advanced ¼c. to ½c.

California raisins—Advanced.

Montreal, October 24, 1906.

Jobbers report a very fair business in all lines, but say that the volume of trade passing is not as large as it should be at this season of the year. Navigation will close shortly, and under ordinary circumstances everybody would be working to the limit. This season, owing, no doubt, to existing conditions, trade is not going forward so briskly. The trouble is that grocers cannot obtain the goods they order. They cannot get raisins, prunes, currants, certain lines of teas and canned goods, tapioca nor numerous other articles. There is a scarcity on every hand. Nevertheless there is a good amount of business being done, and as collections are very good little complaint is heard. There is not a great deal of interest taken in canned goods at present. The high prices quoted on the staple lines have the effect of keeping buyers off. Formerly orders for a large number of cases were placed, but this year, apparently, the grocers are buying only for immediate consumption. There has been no change in the sugar situation, the market being quiet. Teas present little that is new. There is still a cry for Japans, which are hardly obtainable in any quality. Orange Pekoes are up, according to advices from Ceylon. The feature of the dried fruit market is the advance in currants. This is the second advance in two weeks. Shipments of California raisins and prunes are now on the way to Montreal. Coffees, spices and molasses present no features of interest this week. Evaporated apples are now selling at 8c. Lower prices are expected on beans. Honey is as scarce as ever, and maple products are higher.

CANNED GOODS.—Activity in the canned goods market is limited. Since the initial buying finished there has not been much interest taken in the market. As previously reported, the high prices for tomatoes, corn and peas have had the effect of influencing buyers to a great extent. Many, after notifying their dealers that they did not wish their full order, wrote explaining the stand they took. In many instances they said that they felt justified in holding off owing to the high prices. This season they intend to buy only for immediate consumption; instead of buying twenty-five or thirty cases at a time, they will order only five, repeating when necessary. However, this is not the best time of year for canned goods and the next couple of months may bring some improvement in the situation.

SUGAR—Refineries report a fair trade in sugar at ruling prices, while jobbers are also doing more or less in this line, although the sales made are not so large as they generally are at this time. The market is quiet, and no change in prices is looked for at the moment. The New York market is rather easier. It declined twenty points and recovered ten, since when it has remained unchanged with an easy feeling. Raw markets present no new features.

TEA—Teas have been moving out steadily all week. Japans are exceedingly scarce. In first hands holdings are practically nil, while all stocks together would not represent a large amount. Low grades are not obtainable anywhere, and teas between 15c. and 18c. it is next to impossible to obtain. Prices are very strong in all lines. Indians and Ceylons are hardly changed since last report. Orange Pekoes, in Ceylons, are up in the primary market. All blacks are firm. China greens have advanced slightly, according to advices received.

COFFEE—In coffees there is not much of interest. The valorization scheme of the Brazilian Government is still commented upon by the trade. Speculation is rife as to whether prices are likely to be affected in the future, some being of the opinion that an advance of a couple of cents is probable early in November. This remains to be seen. At present prices are unchanged at figures quoted.

FOREIGN DRIED FRUITS — Large shipments of prunes and raisins from California are now said to be on the way to Montreal, and, needless to say, are anxiously awaited by the trade. Prunes are very firm. The large size are scarce, and command a good price when obtainable. In raisins the shipments due to arrive will be used to fill orders booked. Representatives of most of the large California houses have been advised to withdraw from the market, and consequently California raisins are not now quoted. The 4-crown raisins are reported very scarce, and not anything like as plentiful as it was thought they would be. It will be noticed that quotations on all California raisins are higher. Another advance of half a cent has taken place in currants. All lines now quoted are up from a quarter to half a cent above old figures. There is an active demand at ruling prices, all stock offered being rapidly taken up. The direct steamer Bellona has arrived, but insofar as new orders are concerned this will not tend to relieve the situation materially, since practically the whole cargo was booked and sold to arrive. However, the result will be that grocers will now have their orders, which have been standing so long, filled. It is understood that in New York the situation is very strained. No Valencia or Sultana raisins are to be obtained, while California goods, which should have arrived a month ago, are still on the road. Nuts locally are unchanged since last week.

LAST MINUTE PROVISION MARKETS.

Montreal, Thursday, Oct. 25, 1906.

BUTTER—Fair demand locally at unchanged prices, but no export trade.

CHEESE—Market quiet, but inclined to be easier.

EGGS—Good demand prevails. Market firm.

PROVISIONS—Hog market weak owing to heavy deliveries. Lard firm. Smoked meats rather slow. Abattoir dressed hogs quoted $9 to $9.25 per 100 lbs.

BEANS—Conservative buying is advisable at present. The feeling in the market is for lower prices, and although no material change is noticeable at present, lower figures are possible towards the beginning of November. Spot stocks are not large, farmers apparently holding their beans, but they will have to ship them sooner or later, and prices are bound to be lower when receipts become heavy.

ONTARIO MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Something unusual in beans.

Sugar market weaker.

Currants continue to advance in primary market.

Somewhat weaker feeling in provisions.

Evaporated apples firm.

Toronto, October 25, 1906.

Business is seasonable in all lines and collections are satisfactory. There is a weaker tone to the sugar market, though a decline is not actually anticipated. Consumption indeed is limited and interest flags.

This is the time of year when the bean trade gets active. Just now the situation is puzzling the trade here. Big dealers in the bean district, Essex and Kent, are refusing to take business and there is an uneasy feeling that perhaps prices are going higher. A shrewd surmise of the situation is that some large dealers are over-sold for October shipment and that farmers are holding back for better prices. Prices may advance temporarily but it is believed the crop was good and that there are plenty of beans in the country and prices presently will be normal.

Dried fruits continue firm with currants still advancing. The canned fruit trade is normal. Teas, especially Ceylons, are advancing. Evaporated apples are in limited supply and the market is firm.

CANNED GOODS—Quotations are unchanged. Business is reported by the jobbers to be good for the season and the trade seem to be recovering from the shock of the opening prices. Corned beef quotations are higher.

Fruit and vegetable quotations are unchanged and are left out this week.

TEA—Cables from London this week indicate a higher market especially for Ceylons in grades above common and in common also to some extent. Gow, Wilson & Stanton, London, reporting by mail under date of October 12 say :

"As the year advances figures become less affected by budget disturbances, and it is now clear that home consumption has materially increased of late, duty from the 1st of January having been paid on 10 million lbs. more tea than a year ago. The position is further strengthened by the remarkable expansion in re-exports, which are also 10 million lbs. in excess of last year, practically the whole of this 20 millions increase being in Indian and Ceylon teas. The stock of all tea in the country is now down to the same figure as at the corresponding period last year, a more satisfactory condition than has prevailed for a long time."

COFFEE—Willett & Gray, New York, say : "The Government is buying coffee largely in Santos. Europe and the States are regularly buying. There is little or no speculative coffee left for sale. Receipts have reached their highest and commence to decrease. The growing crop promises a very small yield. These and many other points are all favorable to coffee ; the price is absurdly low. Scarcely anything exists tangibly unfavorable to the article beyond the temporary increase of supplies in sight, and the distribution of available coffee for the absolute necessities of consumption will be very rapid as fast as it arrives in Europe and the States. The sound and healthy position of coffee rises superior to pessimism and prejudice. The markets may remain quiet for a time until the true conditions are better appreciated, but meanwhile the trade has a splendid opportunity to secure cheap coffee."

SUGAR—Beet sugar is the ruling feature in the market at present. It declined last week and continues to decline this. Willett & Gray, New York, said of raws at the close of last week : "The changes of the week have been confined to the European markets. Quotations here have remained steady at 4c. for 96 degrees test centrifugals with a tendency to ask more for the few cane sugars offering. Beet sugar opened at 9s. 6d., declined to 9s. 5½d., advanced to 9s. 7½d., and declined to 9s. 4½d. at the close for prompt delivery. The weakness which has developed is due to the first estimate of the European beet crop made by Mr. F. O. Licht as 6,570,000 tons, which is some 300,000 tons larger than had been anticipated, although nearly 400,000 tons smaller than last year's crop."

The estimate of the world's total cane and beet crops for 1906-7 is 11,834,000 tons, against 12,143,997 tons for 1905-06 and 9,536,769 tons for 1904-05.

The estimated decrease in the world's production for the current year is therefore 309,744 tons. In the campaign of 1905-06 the production in tons was : Cane, 4,906,082 ; European beet, 6,954,000, and American beet, 283,717 ; total, 12,143,799 tons, while for 1906-07 the total estimates are : Cane, 4,919,000 ; European beet, 6,570,000, and American beet, 345,000 ; total, 11,834,000 tons.

It is probable changes in the estimates of the current crop will be towards reductions rather than increases.

Following are Willett & Gray's latest estimates of the world's production and consumption since 1903 :

DRIED FRUITS—All markets in dried fruits are well sustained with still a forward tendency in currants. Prices locally are firming and lower quotations are advanced in some lines. First shipments of all dried fruits have arrived and are being distributed. To meet competition, some houses are shading ¼c. on Sultana raisins.

Speaking of the prune situation Mr. Lambe, of W. G. A. Lambe & Co., said yesterday :

"Under date of October 18 Messrs. Griffin & Skelley advise us that packers are still seriously hampered in getting out shipments as rapidly as they would like on account of the scarcity of labor, box material and cars.

"The embarrassing conditions in California have affected the farmers fully as much as the packers, as the farmers have been unable to get help to gather and deliver their crops. In many instances no thought whatever has been taken to gather in the smaller sizes of prunes, leaving them on the ground and turning in the hogs.

"To add to the difficulties of the position, packers have had the heaviest demand for prunes ever known in the history of the business. The early estimates are proved to be entirely wrong, due to the inability of the farmers to harvest their crops to best advantage.

"It is reported that the crop of Italian prunes in Oregon and Washington has proved practically a failure, thus removing a disturbing element as far as prices are concerned, particularly with regard to the large sizes.

"It is now thought that packers are not going to be able to deliver all the 30-40's and 40-50's California prunes that have been sold. The shortage of these two sizes creates an unusual demand for the next larger sizes, and will materially affect the final tonnage of the crop."

BEANS—Some of the jobbers here are a little worried to fill their bean orders. Up to the end of last week the market was easy on the assurance of a good average crop with increased acreage. This week large dealers in the bean district are refusing business and prices are much firmer. Some of the dealers in the growing district sold heavily for October shipment. Prices opened low and farmers after satisfying their immediate requirements are holding back and the dealers are experiencing difficulty in filling orders. There are plenty of beans in the country and they will be forthcoming when the prices suit the growers. That's the way the riddle is read here. On the other hand beans have advanced in New York.

The statist of the Victorian Government, Australia, has figured out that there were 26,500,000 less sheep in the world in 1903 than there were 16 years before, in 1887. But the sheep in Australia have since increased 17,000,000 and it is estimated that probably the entire loss has been made up. But the wool consuming population of the earth has increased 12½ per cent. since 1878. "These figures," says the Canadian commercial agent at Australia, "will explain the wool situation of to-day and its probable future."

N. B. MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., Oct. 22, 1906.

Dealers are very busy and work with exceeding good heart, as in almost every case markets are in their favor. The further advance in California dried fruits, particularly in raisins, is a matter of much interest and some profit. Large quantities were sold to arrive. While this cuts into the profit, it means pleased customers. In spice, pepper is rather higher. Cream of tartar shows quite an advance. Rice holds firm at the fuller figures.

OIL—There is nothing new to report in burning oil. Demand is heavy at this season. Lubricating oils show rather lighter business. In paint oil demand has been good, but sales at present less active. Quite full values rule. Receipts of cod oil have, so far this season, been light. Just fair prices obtained. It is said large quantities are shipped direct to the United States market.

SALT—In Liverpool coarse salt quite full stocks are held. Sales but fairly active. In fine salt business is quiet.

CANNED GOODS—Supplies are coming to hand very freely. Dealers this season are making a fair profit. Guild prices being maintained. Full values rule in all lines. This is not a large market for fruits, few are sold outside of apples, peaches, strawberries and pears. A limited sale for local packed blueberries. Salmon are firmly held. Oysters very scarce. Baltimore packers cleaned up on old stocks. In domestic fish, sardines rather light supply; a fair stock of haddies and kippers.

GREEN FRUITS—Dealers are busy. Apples rather dull; there are daily auction sales. Only the poorer grades are offered in this way. Oranges and lemons are still held at full figures, though some good Jamaica oranges are offered at reasonable prices. Pears about cleaned up. Cranberries are firmer. Some nice Tokay grapes received. Malagas are good. In Ontario stock prices quite firm.

DRIED FRUIT—A further advance in California raisins is an interesting factor in the market. This means an advance of a cent and a half from opening figures. In prunes, while market is firmer, values still low. New shortly expected. Apricots and peaches are very high. New currants offered; prices are again higher. Package goods supply the market. Dates firmly held; old stock well cleaned up. New figs and peels here, full prices asked. Evaporated apples are higher and the position said to be very strong. Onions move freely; prices unchanged.

SUGAR—Sales are very heavy. Dealers carry full stocks. Prices unchanged.

MOLASSES—Fair business. Market firm. Porto Rico unchanged. Barbadoes rather higher. Fair stocks are held.

FISH—Little business in fresh fish. Dry fish unchanged, fair stocks are held. Pickled herring move freely at this season; market well supplied. In smoked herring supplies of new fish come to hand slowly. Business dull and prices low. Finnan haddies are being shipped west in large quantities.

FLOUR, FEED AND MEAL—In flour there is active business. Ontario flour is certainly a very cheap food at present figures, being well below oatmeal, which is firmly held. Cornmeal is rather lower. The domestic mills are inclined to cut out the jobbers. Beans rather firmer. Large quantities were bought at the lower prices. Yellow eyes are higher.

DEATH OF J. H. MAIDEN.

J. H. Maiden, manufacturers' agent, Montreal, died last week, after a lingering illness which extended more or less steadily over two years. Up to a few weeks before his death he appeared to be recovering, but he suffered a relapse, which ended in death.

Mr. Maiden was well and favorably known in the trade, although he had only been in business four years. He controlled several good agencies and was just beginning to attain success in his chosen field.

He was born in Belleville thirty-two years ago, but came to Montreal when fourteen years of age. He received his education in that city and later secured employment in a produce and provision house. He was engaged in this business until 1902 when he set up on his own account. He had a control of Eagle baking powder, and was agent for Deerfield water, Mollassine meal and various other lines, besides representing the Walker Bin & Stores Fixture Co.

Andrew Watson, 425 St. Paul street, will take over all the agencies controlled by the late Mr. Maiden, with the exception of Deerfield water, the representative for which will be the A. H. Brown Bottling Co.

NEATLY PREPARED BOOKLET.

A very neatly prepared little booklet has been issued by the Halifax Cold Storage Co. In it the reader finds explained a system of cold storage by which fish may be held for a long time before consumption, without suffering any more than flour or sugar. The various steps through which the fish passes while being prepared by the company, their plant and the different departments are all found described in the book. The little work is profusely illustrated with fine views.

TRADE NOTES.

M. G. Beatty, Dallycroy, has bought the general store business of D. J. Downey Co., Alliston.

J. O. Laporte, of Bernard & Laporte, wine merchants, Montreal, is visiting the trade in northern parts of Quebec at present.

Clarke Alexander, of James Alexander, Limited, cheese and butter exporters, Montreal, spent the latter end of the week in Toronto.

S. W. Ewing, of S. H. Ewing & Son, Montreal, was in Toronto this week attending a meeting of the executive of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

F. H. Taylor, Niagara Falls, is making some interior improvements to his fine grocery. One important change is the removal of the counter on one side to give more floor space.

The self-satisfied need to be short-sighted.

Let the faint-hearted not be discouraged. Life is sweet and only the good die young.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Market quotations corrected by telegraph up to 12 a.m. Wednesday, Oct. 25, 1906.)

Oatmeal has been reduced to $2.10 pork sack. Local jobbing houses and brokers are finding great difficulty in procuring supplies of honey and prices are advancing in consequence. New evaporated apples are arriving in good supply, the opening price being 8c. per pound. Business continues very active in all general grocery lines and the wholesale houses are beginning to feel the first impetus of Christmas trade.

CANNED GOODS—Pumpkins have been advanced 20c. per case and revised quotations will be noted below. There is a heavy movement of canned fruits and vegetables. We quote:

MONTHLY COMPETITION.

Window dressing, we believe, is one of the most important parts of the grocery business. It needs encouragement in Canada. For that reason The Canadian Grocer has decided to hold a monthly window dressing competition. Three prizes of $5, $3 and $2 will be awarded each month. Those wishing to enter the competition will send photographs of their windows to THE CANADIAN GROCER, 10 Front St. East, Toronto. accompanied by a written description.

This is a chance for the clerk. No department of the grocery trade offers larger opportunities for advancement than window dressing. If you don't know what you can do, try. If you don't surprise yourself the effort will be a great advantage in any case. No grocer is up to his business if he cannot dress a window. Get into the competition.

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS

Halifax, N.S., October 23.

The local grocery markets still continue very active, there being a good volume of orders coming in and collections are fully up to expectations. Prices are pretty steady all round. Since last report sugar declined ten cents per hundred pounds in New York, but no change has taken place here. It has been the occasion for comment on the part of some jobbers that the local sugar market is quick to take advantage of any increase in price in other markets, but very slow in responding to a decline.

POULTRY—Those who ate the toothsome turkey on Thanksgiving Day had to pay a high price for it. Twenty-five cents per pound was the price asked for young birds, and there was only a small supply on the market. A few years back there were always lots of birds offered for sale at Thanksgiving, the prevailing price usually being about 15 cents. Times have changed, however, and the quantity of birds raised is very limited, the poultry raisers claiming that the birds require great care to rear, and that they are most destructive. Geese sold at 18 cents per pound and chickens at 15 cents per pound. These prices are prohibitive to the poor.

FRUIT—The recent heavy wind storm in the fruit raising districts played havoc with the orchards, and in some sections of the Annapolis and Cornwallis Valleys the ground was covered with apples, as many as one hundred barrels being blown down in some of them. As a result the market here is being flooded with poor stock, large quantities of which are being auctioned off at $1 to $1.25 per barrel. There is very little hard fruit on the market, and Gravensteins are the same as last quotation.

BEEF AND PORK—Prices rule high for beef and pork. There has been a recent advance in pork of 25 cents, and on beef about $1.25. Lard has also advanced ½c. per pound. Fresh pork by the carcass is quoted at 9 cents.

BUTTER AND EGGS—The receipts of both are very limited. Nova Scotia eggs are very scarce, 22 cents being good for fresh stock. There is a fairly good supply of island eggs on the market but the sale for them is nothing very great, the consumer preferring Nova Scotia stock if obtainable. The price of butter is unchanged. Prince Edward cheese in wholesale lots is quoted by the factories at 13½ cents, delivered in Halifax.

The receipts of Prince Edward Island potatoes are increasing, and they are now quoted at 40 cents per bushel at the wharves.

A HUSTLING SALESMAN.

Walter C. Gaden, Apostle of Red Rose Tea in Montreal.

If the merits of Red Rose tea are not drilled into the grocers of Montreal by this time, it is not the fault of the Montreal representative of T. H. Estabrooks, Walter C. Gaden. Mr. Gaden knows everybody in the grocery trade, and everybody knows Mr. Gaden, who is popular wherever he goes.

He was born in the country where so many good people come from, Newfoundland, in the little town of Harbor Grace, being a son of the late Garland Crawford Gaden, high sheriff of the Northern District of Newfoundland. He spent the early years of his life in the country of his birth, and was educated at Roddick's Grammar School.

Subsequently he studied law for a while, but gave it up, and entered the commercial field in Montreal, in which he has since worked.

He entered the employ of John Murphy, then on Notre Dame street, where he remained for some time as a clerk. Leaving that firm he became connected with David Laidlaw, also on Notre Dame street, where he made himself a valued employe. His aspirations pointed to greater things, and he entered business on his own account, opening a retail store on St. Lawrence street, near Pine avenue. Mr. Gaden commanded a good trade, but evidently the retail trade did not meet his ideas of a good business, for he decided to venture into the wholesale field. He secured a line of washing compound, "Victorine," which is probably known in most towns and cities of the Dominion. Securing premises on St. Paul street, Mr. Gaden commenced manufacturing this powder and soon introduced it to the trade in every part of Canada. Much of his experience as a traveler was gained during the time he pushed Victorine. During the nine years he spent in selling this article to the grocers, he made many friends who still deal with him, but in another line.

In 1903 Mr. Estabrooks, of St. John, succeeded in inducing Mr. Gaden to take up Red Rose tea and push it with the trade. He covers Montreal and the suburbs in a manner which leaves nothing undone. Formerly Red Rose tea was but fairly well known in the city, but now there are few grocers who do not carry this line. Mr. Gaden's excellent knowledge of French, his genial personality, and his willingness to oblige, besides his knowledge of the trade, has been the means of building up a fine business for T. H. Estabrooks in Montreal and the surrounding district.

Outside of business, Mr. Gaden has any number of friends, and is always welcome at social gatherings.

Mr. Gaden fought in the Northwest Rebellion in 1885, serving in the Montreal Garrison Artillery.

BETTER THAN THE REVIEW OF REVIEWS.

It has long been the custom both in this country and England to disparage the attempts of Canadians to produce popular magazines. That the tide has turned is evidenced by the remarks of the editor of one of Ireland's leading periodicals, the Irish Monthly, who asserts that there is in Canada a magazine—The Busy Man's Magazine—which outdistances anything in the same field yet attempted in England. In the course of a long eulogy of this magazine he said: "It seems to realize the ideal that Mr. W. T. Stead proposed to himself better than Mr. Stead himself has done in his Review of Reviews. He, too, proposed to reproduce for busy people the cream of the world's magazines; but he is too original a man, he has too much of his own, to be merely a reproducer. Every page is sure to be studded with Steadisms. His magazine is not the less interesting for that, but it is the less able to give with adequate fullness the best articles of the periodicals of the previous month. The Busy Man's Magazine keeps more steadily — that is the best adverb, and the possible suspicion of a pun must not make us fling it aside —keeps more steadily to its purpose of reproducing for busy men and women the best articles from the current magazines of the world. The form, too, of the magazine is much more pleasant, of a convenient size and shape, and the type large and readable."

Produce and Provisions

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN.

An apparent weakness has recently developed on the cheese market. Late country markets have been lower, and there has been a lack of demand from Great Britain, yet the Montreal market has undergone but little change in the matter of quotations, and prices have been held quite steady, which shows clearly an underlying strength or confidence in the future on the part of the larger operators.

As the season of production is drawing to a close, and the quality of the late made goods becomes less desirable, it is only natural that those holding high-priced goods will use every legitimate effort to buy these late made goods at reduced prices. These goods must largely be carried for some time, which is expensive, when the naturally to be expected shrinkage in weight is considered, besides charges for storage, insurance and interest on money.

That the goods will be wanted later on there is no reasonable doubt; the only question is, will they be wanted at a profit? Prices are high, and if carrying charges are added, there must be a considerable advance in the future to realize a profit, say after New Year.

Statistically the situation is sound on this side of the Atlantic. Shipments have been heavy all the season and only the best quality of cheese remains in store here. Country markets are practically bare of stocks, and our total stocks in Canada are decidedly lighter than a year ago.

Against this we find larger visible supplies in British centres, and we are told that there are large lines of Summer made cheese, over-ripe and otherwise of undesirable quality. However, as these goods were probably bought by British importers at lower prices, and as there is always a demand for goods "under finest," these may yet be disposed of at paying prices.

Receipts were last week 73,891 boxes of cheese and 10,014 packages of butter, against 69,419 boxes of cheese and 15,989 packages of butter for the same week of last year, or since May 1 2,033,168 boxes of cheese and 544,662 packages of butter, as compared with 1,989,828 boxes of cheese and 690,173 packages of butter for the corresponding period of last year.

Exports were last week 60,532 boxes of cheese and 7,066 packages of butter, against 89,175 boxes of cheese and 9,851 packages of butter for the same week of last year, or a total since May 1 of 1,930,331 boxes of cheese and 353,459 packages of butter, as compared with 1,819,890 boxes of cheese and 534,346 packages of butter for the corresponding period of last year.

Receipts of cheese show an increase of 43,340 boxes and exports show an increase of 110,441 boxes, leaving a balance of 67,101 boxes less in stock in Montreal than at the same time last year. Receipts of butter decreased 145,511 packages and shipments decreased 180,887 packages, leaving 35,376 packages more in stock than a year ago.

Considering the lighter stocks of cheese in Canada this year, and also considering last year's shortage in supplies for the Winter's trade, we can hardly call present prices unreasonably high, and it is quite possible that our present holdings will after all be disposed of at a profit later on during the Winter months.

Butter is somewhat different to cheese. Our export outlet is exceedingly limited, and after the cheese factories are closed for the season there is generally more or less butter made, which may keep prices from advancing, as the quality is not good enough for keeping purposes, and this Winter made butter must be put into consumption while it is quite fresh. And as we depend almost entirely on our local trade during the Winter months, it is difficult to tell what the future prices are likely to be.

Above figures leave us apparently a surplus stock of 35,376 packages of butter, but with the cows running dry already in many sections, it is possible that there will not be much "Winter made" butter this year and then we might expect steady or perhaps even advancing prices.

PRODUCE SITUATION.

The produce situation is becoming somewhat more interesting. The deliveries of hogs last week in Ontario were heavier than for a twelve-month. The farmers seemed to smell a decline. They were not mislead either, for this week prices are down 25c. to 40c., and not very steady at that Quotations of $5.75 and $6.90 have been reported but $6 to $6.15 is the accepted level. Deliveries aggregated 35,000 to 38,000. About 30,000 of these will be marketed in England in about five weeks. They will make 5,000 boxes of bacon, and the Canadian deliveries for weeks have been averaging 2,500 to 3,000 boxes. Because of the light deliveries the prices of Canadian bacon has been held up to within a couple of shillings of Danish and Irish. With increased supplies in sight buyers are more indifferent, and the market on the other side has turned weaker. Packers here look for a pretty sharp decline in a week or so now.

The domestic situation is certainly easier, though packers are loath to admit it, and last week's prices are still quoted, and in some instances advanced. Smoked meats are, however, being shaded ½c. to 1c. Perhaps the effect of the usual tend of things has been felt more by dealers than the packers as yet. They are looking for a decline and are buying just from hand to mouth. Stocks, however, are still very light, so that the pressure to sell is not great.

OUR LONDON (ENG.) LETTER.

Canadian sellers seem to have matters pretty well their own way as far as the provision trade here in London is concerned. There is active cable demand for Canadian bacon, of which the shortage is most noticeable; Canadian butter is difficult to get, and cable quotations are exceedingly stiff. Canadian cheese is arriving in quantities which are just about on a level with the demand, possibly slightly under the consumptive demand, so that buyers are ready to get as much as they can. In fact, so long as prices are not absolutely prohibitive, the condition of affairs seems to be such that importers here will find it necessary to respond to stiff cable quotations.

Particularly in Canadian bacon is there a serious shortage. Spot holders are asking pretty stiff figures, but buyers seem to come in alright, and a brisk business is transacted. This in spite of the fact that certain large retailers are grumbling that the quality does not warrant such advances in price. It is evidently a case of "take what you can get and be thankful for it."

The outstanding feature of the Canadian butter market here is also the scarcity of supplies. Choicest quality is realizing 116 shillings, but the demand is not particularly active. Truth to say, there is a feeling of uncertainty with regard to the quality of Canadian butter that is hard to dispel. The reason for this was mentioned in a previous letter. Certain factories have been shipping mouldy stuff — it can hardly be termed butter—and the natural consequence is that the innocent are suffering with the guilty. "The fact is," an importer remarked to the writer, "Canadian shippers know how the demand stands over here, and how sources of supply are not as fruitful as is desired, and therefore they don't care what the quality is like. They think they have the upper hand." This is probably exaggerated, but at the same time it reveals the feelings of importers here and shows what they believe, rightly or wrongly, are the motives by which Canadian shippers are governed.

Stocks of Canadian cheese at London depots are about 193,000 boxes, which is a fair quantity and shows that supply is more or less on a par with consumption. Canadian shippers have, wisely as it would seem, eased their quotations a little this week. Truth to tell, retailers seem to be content to invest their money in lower grades of Canadian cheese. These are moving briskly, although the demand for choicest is inclined to be quiet. Prices are still very stiff, and quality is reported good.

CANADA'S BACON INDUSTRY.

Lord Strathcona Forwards Remarks of Produce House.

Lord Strathcona's report of March 31 on the commercial relations between Canada and the United Kingdom finds its way into this week's Weekly Report of the Department of Trade and Commerce. The export of Canadian bacon to Great Britain increased last year from £829,883 the previous year to £1,191,390.

The High Commissioner quotes "a few remarks on the Canadian export trade in bacon by a prominent produce house":

"The popularity of Canadian bacon and hams has been steadily growing in the United Kingdom, though owing to certain conditions existing in respect of the price of live hogs the trade has not shown the expansion during 1904 which might have been expected. In the opinion of my directors, the position of the hog packing is at the present somewhat critical. It is a matter of common knowledge that for the last eighteen months the price of hogs in Canada has been out of all reasonable proportion as regards the price of the finished product in the United Kingdom. This condition of affairs appears to have arisen in Canada probably from the fact that the number of packing houses which have been established in Canada is now largely in excess of the supply of hogs in that country. Competition amongst the Canadian packers of a more or less reckless character in the buying of hogs has led to an artificial price being paid for the live hog, so that constant and serious losses have been incurred by the Canadian packers.

"There appears to be no immediate probability of any relief from this position till the raising of hogs in Canada assumes larger proportions or till the Canadian packers realize the impossibility and hopelessness of competing successfully against cheap European hogs with relatively dear raw material. If the present state of matters goes on, what promises to be a healthy and growing industry for Canada will be seriously crippled and probably be set back for some years. If the Canadian packers would combine in a friendly way, arranging to pay only such prices for hogs as would insure them a reasonable probability of making a profit on their product in the United Kingdom, the industry would once again assume a healthy state of affairs.

"The quality of Canadian bacon has continued to improve, and the British taste is undoubtedly steadily growing in the direction of Canadian produce; but what is not realized in Canada is that, however fine their bacon may be, it cannot still be considered as choice an article as is shipped from Denmark, and that without there is an advantage in the price of the large hog as compared with the Danish and Irish hog, the Canadian cannot prosper. The conditions under which the Danish hog is raised are totally different to the conditions existing in Canada, and though the Canadian hog is an infinitely superior hog for English bacon purposes to the United States hog, yet on the other hand the Danish and Irish hog is again superior to the Canadian, and this state of affairs is not likely to be changed in the immediate future.

"The present state of affairs by which packing house after packing house is being built in Canada, in the face of the fact that there is not a supply of the raw material to give such undertakings a reasonable chance of success, is bound to end in disaster sooner or later."

SOME POOR CANADIAN BUTTER BOXES.

W. A. McKinnon, Canadian commercial agent at Bristol, Eng., writes:

"I regret being obliged to record objections made to the manner in which some Canadian butter boxes are turned out. Some of these which arrive here are criticised as being very rough and badly made; in many cases the covers project beyond the boxes, so that in handling they are very apt to be broken or torn off. Other lots have arrived in a very dirty condition; the canvas covers which were originally white being described by one gentleman in the trade here as 'filthy.' It must be evident to all that in comparison with the neat and attractive New Zealand packages our own suffer considerably, even if the faulty boxes form a slight percentage of each cargo."

A LOSING GAME.

Truly the path of the commercial man is not strewn with roses to any great extent, but once in a while he has only himself to blame for his troubles. Now it came to pass while this year was yet young, that one or two retailers up in Huron County began to get their goods freight paid, a very pleasant thing indeed. Of course only one or two of the wholesale houses did business that way, and only in these special cases, and thereby hangs a tale. Pretty soon the fact began to be known to those who were not participating. Naturally they got after Mr. Commercial Man with a sharp stick, and succeeded in getting their freight paid. One man in a lakeside town collected freight for a couple of months back and then stopped doing business with the house, so it is said. At any rate, these houses find it necessary now to pay freight on groceries in order to do business at all, while those who didn't are getting the trade of the men who were "riled" at the favoritism shown.

PROVISION AND DAIRY MARKETS.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS—There has been an advance of half a cent in pure lard since last week, which is not surprising considering conditions which have prevailed. Pork is strong, and an advance would not be a surprise to the trade. Compound lard is scarce and prices are firm. Hams and bacon are slightly easier this week. Receipts of hogs are larger than they have been for some time.

BUTTER—Demand from the Old Country is nil, and with the increased receipts, and no export business, the result has been a decline of about half a cent from the highest point reached. There is a good home demand, and with a continuance of local trade a further decline is not considered probable. Stocks here are fairly large, and at present there does not appear to be any prospect of a shortage. Dairy butter is very scarce, the high price of cheese this season having diverted the milk from the dairy house to the cheese factory, which has resulted in a shortage of dairy. A good demand is reported from country points, which would indicate that stocks are none too large.

CHEESE—This week the market rules easier, there being a decline of about ⅜c. on country boards, on account of present receipts of October make, which are generally obtainable for less money. Present demand from England is very slow, and it remains to be seen whether or not there will be any improvement at the cheaper prices. Price for the best September is still held firm, holders not being willing to make much of a concession just now, so that the demand for some little time is bound to be for the cheaper goods. With the quality becoming poorer as the season advances it is natural to look for a further decline as probable.

EGGS—Receipts of fresh eggs are practically nil and dealers are obliged to use eggs they have in storage. Complaints are made that the present prices do not warrant the taking out of storage eggs, since expenses are hardly paid, and the general opinion is that higher prices will have to come. Strictly new laid eggs will bring a fancy price today. Fresh selects are easily worth 25c. and it would be possible, in some instances, to obtain more than this. There is a little export business being carried on, a few limed and cold storage eggs being shipped. Weather in the Old Country is at present too mild to be conducive to profitable trade between the two countries, and larger shipments are not likely to be made before another fortnight at least.

PROVISIONS—The market continues firm and here and there more than the prices quoted are asked. Stocks are low and the lower prices for hogs and heavier deliveries have not yet affected products. BUTTER—Quotations here are practically unchanged. One large dealer views the market as "strong," another as "easy." The fact seems to be that creamery is in good supply and dairy small. In pork higher prices asked. Supplies hard to get. Quantity of Domestic offered is light. It brings a high price. Beef is higher and packers are not pushing sales. Pure lard is also again higher. Refined compound is held firm; supply is very light. Smoked meats are high. In fresh beef business quiet; fair values rule for the season. Much of the domestic beef is only fair quality. Lamb rather higher. Very little veal or mutton offered. Pork continues high.

"THE BEST PACKAGES MADE"

Manufacturers are beginning to realize the preference the consumer has for the sweet and clean natural Wood Package over the inferior Tin substitute which has recently been much in evidence and which is daily becoming more unpopular. It has been proven that they are not safe containers for food products of any kind.

This Tin article has become so unpopular that the better class of trade will not accept any goods packed in same, and this condition, apparently, is spreading very rapidly and will soon become general.

It is, therefore, of the utmost importance that you handle only packages which are in favor with the buying public and no doubt it will prove advantageous to use exclusively the Pioneer Wood Package which has stood the test for so long a time and without any objectionable features being found in them. This applies particularly to packages for Lard, Butter, Jam, Syrup, Candy, Mince Meat, Pickles, Biscuits, etc.

CEREALS AND CONFECTIONERY

Quiet Market—Car Shortage at Lake Ports—Ontario Small Miller and the Export Trade—Cereal Mills Busy.

The week past has been characterized by a fairly active trade in both grain and flour within comparatively narrow range. The car shortage at lake ports is getting serious, millers being unable to get shipments forward to their mills. The advance of the Bank of England interest rate was a setback to prices in Liverpool and authoritative information from the Argentine Minister of Agriculture to the effect that the crop was in good shape was also a bearish influence.

At the present export quotation for Ontario flour, $2.75, the small miller has about 15c. or 20c. margin, and that will not pay the cost of milling. However, it enables him to keep his mill going and as he sends only what he has left over from his domestic trade he doesn't figure more than the cost of his wheat and looks at his $45 surplus on a car as found money.

MONTREAL.

GRAIN—Oats are easier this week, prices being slightly lower, but otherwise the market is uninteresting. Corn is also a little easier, and is now quoted at 57c.

FLOUR—Business continues brisk at unchanged prices. Considerable export trade is being done, while orders for home consumption are quite good. At the time of writing the wheat market is slightly easier, but millers are inclined to believe that this is only a slight reaction which will not amount to much.

FEED—Bran and shorts are very scarce, and higher, this week. It is thought probable in some quarters that prices will ease off within the next couple of weeks. Mills which have been shut down for a month or so have now opened up, and their output may have the effect of increasing supplies, and thus lowering the price. Others say that the mills are quite sold up, which would not be surprising under the circumstances. A good demand exists for mixed feeds.

HAY—The market is quite without feature. Nothing of importance has developed since last report. Farmers are selling some of their holdings, but no large transactions are being made. Dealers complain of the shortage of cars in the country, which makes it difficult to obtain shipment for any lots bought.

In the Old Country the situation remains practically the same as it was last week. Quotations are still 72s. to 73s. c.i.f. Liverpool.

GRAIN—The week has been quiet. Prices for western wheat declined a cent and a half but are firming up again. Millers have been opposed to stocking up, believing in a probability of lower prices between now and the close of navigation.

NOVA SCOTIA FRUIT PRODUCTS.

Results in England.

A cable from Northard & Lowe, of London, gives the prices realized at the sales of apples on Saturday last ex steamer Halifax City, from this port as follows: "Gravensteins, 14s. to 17s.; Ribstons, 15s. to 18s.; Blenheims, 1s. to 19s. Many Gravensteins, spotted, and in an unsatisfactory condition."

J. W. Bigelow, superintendent of the horticultural department at the recent Dominion Exhibition, said that the exhibit of fruit was the largest ever shown in Canada. He stated that there were 5,000 crates and jars on exhibition, of fruits from all over the Dominion. This Dominion-wide competition was a feature of this year's exhibition. Perhaps the lack of such competition in former years had led some people to the opinion that Nova Scotia stood alone in fruit raising capacity. Now this was dispelled and another good effect was secured, that of proving that the product was equal, and superior in many cases, to the productions from other parts of the Dominion.

Swept the Board.

It is gratifying to note in this respect that the main prize, the Canadian sweepstake, donated by the Dominion Government for competition among the different provinces, was carried off by Nova Scotia. There were but two entries, Nova Scotia and Ontario, and the value of the prize was $60. The Ontario exhibits, which were highly creditable to the great province whence they came, were in charge of J. F. Bunting, president of the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association. The Nova Scotia fruit shown was superior in color, if not quite as large, to the other competitors.

The Dominion Government display, which was in charge of Professor Macoun, of Ottawa, was very fine.

There was also in this building a splendid exhibit of the fruits gathered by the Nova Scotia Fruit Growers' Association, with a display of the medals won by members of that association during the last thirty years. In grapes and peaches the Province of Ontario took the lead, but this province was superior in all other respects.

Some of Canada's Wealth.

A word of praise is due the veteran superintendent, Mr. Bigelow, for the splendid and effective display made. Mr. Bigelow has been in charge of this branch since he has been a member of the Commission, and he brings to the discharge of his duties a strong practical knowledge. He had George F. Johnson, late Dominion statistician, prepare a table of facts and figures relative to the agricultural wealth of the Dominion. This table, in large print, was displayed in a most conspicuous portion of the building, and it conveyed to many information hitherto unknown of the marvellous resources of the Dominion. Some figures are appended:

Canada contains 3,613,819 square miles of land, and 125,755 square miles of water. The yield of apples yearly is 16,120,000 barrels, valued at $24,000,000; 600,000 bushels of plums, $1,000,000; 550,000 bushels of pears, $1,500,000; 25,000,000 pounds of grapes, $1,000,000; strawberries, etc. Bushels of wheat, 113,000,000, value $65,000,000; bushels of oats, 236,000,000, value $72,000,000; barley, 26,000,000 bushels, value $20,000,000; other grains, 57,000,000, value $30,000,000; 1,000,000 tons of hay, value $8,000,000; bushels of hay, value $8,000,000; bushels of potatoes, etc., 135,000,000, value $34,000,000.

An Expert's Views.

Professor Craig, of the New York State College of Agriculture, considered one of the best fruit judges in the world, did the judging. Mr. Craig is a Canadian, having for eight years been Dominion Horticulturalist at Ottawa. Of the exhibit at Halifax Mr. Craig said:

"It was my privilege to judge the fruits at the Provincial Exhibition six years ago, and I am free to say that if the same improvement has taken place in orcharding methods and in the packing of fruits, as is manifest here by this greatly improved exhibit over the display which I judged some years ago, then it certainly speaks volumes for the substantial development of the fruit industry of the province.

"Nowhere else in the Dominion," continued the professor, "can one find such fine, well-grown specimens of the high quality, good old-time varieties like Blenheim pippin, Ribston pippin and Gravensteins. These varieties ripen too early for the export trade when grown in the famous Niagara Peninsula, and Nova Scotia has a small part of British Columbia alone as competitor in the production of these high-class varieties so much in demand in the British market. These fruits are pre-eminently Nova Scotia products."

Mr. Craig deprecated the growing of the relatively low quality apples of the middle southwest. It seemed to him a perversion of the natural resources and possibilities of the climate and soil of Nova Scotia to attempt to compete with the orchards of Missouri and Arkansas in growing Ben Davis and the like, when the province was so admirably adapted for the production of a much finer grade of fruit which could not be successfully cultivated in the west. The color and finish of the apples and the fruits is unusually good this year, and should make an excellent impression upon European purchasers.

Professor Craig commended the attention which the fruit growers were paying to the very important question of packages and methods of packing. "At this juncture these problems are of paramount importance," he said. "The style of package and method of packing independent of grading, which is, of course, a fundamental proposition, are influencing the sale of our orchard products more and more each year. The samples of apples packed in boxes and barrels at the recent exhibition illustrated the rapid advancement made in this department in recent years. Nova Scotia fruit-growers are keeping up with the procession in these things and no part of the fruit exhibit has more of educative value than this feature in the present exhibition."

CHRISTMAS NOVELTIES.

Big Business Built Upon a Passing Sentiment.

Among the curious trades in the world is surely that in what for a better or more definite term are called Christmas novelties. There are five seasons for them, Christmas, Easter, Thanksgiving, Hallowe'en, St. Valentine Day, St. Patrick's Day. That, too, is about their order of importance. This applies chiefly to fillers for confectionery. They are infinite in their variety. Santa Claus has a proprietary interest in all toys, but they are scarcely novelties in the ordinary sense. The staple novelty if that be not too Irish, is crackers. A bit of sand paper a pinch of gun powder and a prize enclosed in a little barrel of paper with notched edges; simple enough, but they have trimmings and they cost anywhere from 15c. to $10 a dozen. Crackers are in demand all the year round.

Confectionery fillers are made almost entirely in Germany, and the raw material for most of them is paper mache and the form and coloring of pretty nearly everything in the heavens above the earth beneath and the waters under the earth is imitated with wonderful precision.

The Japanese, too, have a product that is popular in occidental markets. It is fibre boxes with hand painted silk covers. These are made in the homes of the people. The painting is wonderfully true in form and color and many of these covers if painted by local artists could be prized as art treasures. Yet the boxes wholesale here, are as low as 15c. Filled with candy they sell at a price—well the price of the candy.

Some biscuit makers put out a line of Christmas boxes or tins that are exceedingly attractive. Some of the things imitated are, a pile of Dresden plates, a globe, a small octagonial Syrian table or stand, a work basket, a letter box and boxes and caskets of many shapes.

FRUITS, VEGETABLES AND FISH

No Very Marked Changes in the Market This Week— The Apple Situation—Canadian Export Backward Waiting for Consumption of European Crop.

One of the Toronto wholesale fruit firms says this week: "Florida oranges are so far very poor, and we are selling Jamaicas in preference." The reason for this, it seems, is that first shipments of Floridas are usually sour, and it is yet early in the season. They are said to be improving rapidly, however. The Mexican crop, which always has a good sale here, will begin to arrive in another three weeks. Grape fruit shows good quality, and there appears to be lots of it. In this case it is the Florida article which is preferred, Jamaican grape fruit being poorly packed, and seldom arriving in as good condition as that from Florida. First shipments of Almeria grapes, from Liverpool, are said to be the finest in several years. Importations this year via New York are lessening, and those coming direct to Canadian ports, or via Liverpool, are steadily on the increase. Cranberries are still one of the main features of interest in the Toronto market, and although some dealers are adhering to old prices, it is simply for the sake of a temporary profit through large sales, and it is said that it will be impossible to sell next shipments at less than $9.75 per barrel.

In the apple export market, Fred Barker gives the following figures: Apples exported during week ending October 20, 1906, from Canadian ports, 38,593 barrels; from United States ports, 56,307 barrels, making a total of 94,900 barrels, compared with 104,668 barrels for the corresponding week of 1905. The season's total to October 20 amounts to 138,210 barrels, compared with 702,820 barrels for the same period last year. The apple crop in Great Britain and continental Europe is said to be one of the largest in years, and it is thought that Canadian and United States shippers are holding back in the hope of better prices when this product is exhausted. The world's available supply of apples is declared to be the largest yet produced.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

GREEN FRUITS — Active trade is passing in all lines of fruit at present. Prices are firm and upward in tendency, there being several changes to note this week. New figs are quoted as high as 14c. Cape Cod cranberries are considerably higher than they have been since the season opened. Anything between $10 and $12 is obtainable for barrels. The Canadian variety is quoted at $8. Apples are commanding the greatest attention in fruit circles. Export business is fair, but local trade is excellent. Prices run between $2.25 and $4 a barrel. Pears in boxes have been advanced to $3.25, while barrels are now quoted. the figure asked being from $5.50 to $9 according to quality.

VEGETABLES—Dealers are quite satisfied with the amount of business they are doing. Local account is good, while shipments to all the river ports between Montreal and Quebec are quite worthy of consideration. Red onions are now on the market, and are selling at $3.50 a barrel. Good business has been done in this line since it made its appearance on the market. Tomatoes in boxes are no longer offered. There is a scarcity at present, few lots except from the west being obtainable. Baskets are still offered at 75c., but the quality is not so good. Imported cucumbers are selling from $1 to $3 per dozen. The potato market this week is in a little better condition. Prices asked are from 75c. to 90c. a bag. Sweet potatoes are not enjoying very good sale, only fair trade being transacted. Corn is no longer obtainable.

FISH—Dealers report excellent business. The present weather is conducive to active trade in this line. The feature of the market is the continued arrivals of kippers, bloaters and haddies, in smoked fish. Supplies are coming forward rapidly, but prices are firm. Dealers are well supplied with cod and haddock, prices for which are lower this week. Salmon are scarce and high, while there is very little halibut obtainable, and no price is quoted. Arrivals of green cod are not so large as anticipated, but supplies are adequate to fill all orders. Labrador salmon is now arriving in good quantities, which rather relieves the situation, for British Columbia salmon is scarce. Stormy weather has had the effect of sending up oyster (bulk) prices. At present $1.50 is asked for standards. Malpeque and Buctouche oysters are firm in price, and may go higher. Stocks are fairly large.

FRUIT — Domestic grapes are still coming in, and prices remain the same as last week, with the exception of Rogers, which are advanced to 35c. Shipments of new Messina lemons are expected next week. Although cranberries remain the same per barrel, the price per crate shows some advance. Bananas are plentiful and prices are lower, while oranges are again higher.

Greenhouse lettuce, at 30c., is beginning to drive out the remnants of the garden-grown. Tomatoes are scarcer every day, but what do come in are of good quality. Supplies of cauliflowers are also lessening, and a rise is looked for.

FROZEN FRESH SALMON.

Demand Good in England—Siberian Competition a Factor.

J. B. Jackson, Canadian commercial agent at Leeds, Eng., giving information about the frozen fresh salmon trade, says :

"Not only is there a large demand in this district for the canned salmon from British Columbia, but there is also a growing trade in frozen salmon from British Columbia, which has been arriving in England in excellent condition, and is quite as good as the best Scotch salmon, which readily brings 60 cents per pound.

"The development of this trade in frozen salmon has been so gratifying that competitors are now in the field, and two British steamers of large refrigerating capacity are being employed. These vessels were specially built for the Argentine frozen meat trade, but they are now in Nicolaivsk, a port at the entrance of the Amur River in Siberia, where the fish, immediately on being caught, will be placed in the ships' holds and kept in a frozen state until the cargo is completed.

"The Siberian salmon from the Amur is stated to be equal in size and quality to the British Columbia variety. The fish are to be brought to England whole, and if the venture realizes expectations, the number of steamers engaged will be increased."

Witnesses before the Dominion Grain Commission claim that refuse grain and noxious weeds are being used in mill feeds, and that hog raising is hampered as a consequence.

Robt. Miller, Grand Valley, has sold his grocery business to Thos. Watson. Mr. Miller will continue the bakery which he has been conducting in conjunction with the store.

At the St. John, N.B., exhibition, Club coffee, the brand put up by S. H. Ewing Company, Montreal, received an award. The St. Charles Condensing Company also received an award.

G. H. Hasenflug, Teeswater, who established a large grocery department in connection with his flourishing drygoods business about a year ago, says trade is increasing very satisfactorily in both lines.

The Brantford Starch Works suffered loss to the extent of more than $40,000 in a fire which broke out on October 12. The buildings are fully insured. About fifty hands are thrown out of employment.

G. T. Florey & Son, Amherstburg, have just completed an oak and plate glass front in their store on Dalhousie street, which, with the new metallic ceiling, makes it one of the neatest shops in the town.

H. Rae, Wroxeter, has returned from a trip through the west and is not as enthusiastic as many returned travelers over the life and opportunities of the prairie provinces. That's perhaps because he lives in Wroxeter.

The herring fishing season in Shetland, just brought to a close, has proved a disastrous failure. The islanders ascribe the cause to whale fishing by Norwegians near the islands and demand its prohibition.

About 1,000 nets, containing 10 barrels of herring each, having been left on the bottom last Winter, the waters around Bay of Islands, Nfld., have been polluted to such an extent that the fish may not appear there again for years. An inquiry is being urged.

The U. S. cruiser Morrell and the Canadian cruiser Vigilant have begun the work of setting buoys to mark the boundary line in Lake Erie, on the 8th inst. It is hoped that this will eliminate further cause of annoyance between the fishermen of the two countries.

Dr. Bell-Irving and Mr. Paul Swanson, two of the best-known fisheries men in British Columbia, who are largely interested in the salmon industry, have been at Nanaimo investigating conditions with a view to entering the herring industry.

The general store of J. A. Chicoine and the cheese factories of Ernest Gervain and Alphonse Jarret were destroyed in the destructive fire which recently visited St. Charles. The store was partially, and the cheese factories fully, covered by insurance.

The Department of Inland Revenue, as a result of recent analyses of canned meats, has found additions of cereal products in nearly all the samples tested. Unless the word "loaf" is used on the package, these additions can only be regarded as adulterations.

Geo. Ballard, grocer and boot and shoe merchant, Clinton, died a fortnight ago of typhoid fever. The stock is being offered for sale. Mr. Ballard was a young man, little past 30 and was doing a nice business. He was married but there was no family.

The citizens of Ranfurly, Alta., have organized a board of trade. The officers are: President, Dr. Steele; vice-president, Alfred Blais; secretary-treasurer, G. Elliott; corresponding secretary, A. E. Labelle; councillors, T. W. Thompson, J. Wood, R. Snowball, Al. Reid, E. E. Duplessis.

Mr. Shiells, of Hill & Shiells, Weston, has taken a very pleasant three week's trip to the west. The firm have a large trade and Mr. Shiells had earned his holiday by very close and persistent attention to duty. Both partners are hustlers and their business is increasing rapidly.

Frank Read, Bobcaygeon, has been partridge shooting lately and has had some excellent luck. In that country fortune favors the man who can shoot. Frank is a favorite with the travelers and some of them from Hamilton expect to bear him company in the woods Thanksgiving.

J. R. Scott & Co., general merchants, Mount Forest, have put a very handsome new plate glass front in their store. This firm has been in business in Mount Forest 30 years and their trade was never better than now and continues to increase. They anticipate a heavy Fall and Winter business and are ready for it.

J. E. McCall, Burnt River, is moving into his new store. He has been conducting a general store there five years, and is doing well. When he gets fixed up in his new place his business will be very comfortably housed. B. Miller, who owns the store formerly occupied by Mr. McCall, is opening in it a general store business.

Ramsay Bros., Grand Valley, are doing one of the best businesses in that part of Ontario. They were so busy last week that it took a tea traveler the better part of a day to get near enough to take their order Of course, it was worth waiting There are two brothers, both hustlers, and they started a business only twelve months ago.

George Read, proprietor of the general store at St. Felix de Valois, is dead.

The tornado that struck a corner of the town of Ayr a fortnight ago, removed the roof from the oatmeal mill there.

Chas. Rishor, until recently the representative of T. Kinnear & Co., Toronto, at Peterboro, has purchased the wholesale grocery business of Mr. Carton, of that city. It is his intention to make things hum. He will begin with two travelers on the road. Mr. Carton, who is a keen and shrewd business man, extracted a competency from the business.

J. T. Joyce, Owen Sound's grocer mayor, is just about handing over his business to that aggressive and increasingly popular North Ontario firm, John McQuaker & Co. Mr. Joyce has been one of the most successful grocers in the province. After many years' hard work of persistent attention to a large business, Mayor Joyce has decided to take things a little easier. Of course he won't be idle; that's impossible. He has long devoted much time to the too often ungrateful task of municipal improvement. His heart is still in it. Mr. Joyce will always hold a high place in the regard of the grocery travelers of his day and business generation. He knew how to use them.

Bradstreet's reports are usually to be relied upon implicitly, but once in a great while even so good a system as theirs slips a cog, and a mistake results. This happened last week when it was reported in their weekly sheet that S. M. Warriner, Stouffville, was offering his business for sale. Mr. Warriner has no intention of doing any thing of the kind, and when the announcement appeared in Bradstreet and then in The Canadian Grocer, he was naturally annoyed. Bradstreet's have apologized, and The Grocer can do no less. Mr. Warriner has been in business in Stouffville for 20 years and has one of the finest trades in that section of the province.

Not long ago Phil Brown one of John Sloan & Co's Toronto travelers, entertained his city confreres to a fowl supper at his pleasant home in Mimico. They had such an enjoyable time that they decided to return. Having accumulated a sufficient quantity of "prog" they unexpectedly swooped down upon the genial Phil last Friday night. There were R. H. Britt, W. H. Maxwell, J. Ormarod, G. Moodie, Fred Bone and Mr. Kerby. Everyone had all that was coming to him in the way of enjoyment and Phil Brown was moved to song. Before making haste to overtake the last car to the city, the company drank the toast "John Sloan & Co."

Attach Importance To What Is Important

Cigar selection is an important matter—Important to you, because on the wisdom of your selection depends the earning power of your stock—Important to your friends, because on the wisdom of your recommendation depends the number of times they'll be seen at your store.

Smokers require value consistency, taste evenness in cigars. Pebble and Pharaoh take full marks on these points.

And these very cigars are included in a "500" assortment that I am now offering to the grocery trade on the "three months" basis.

The Geo. E. Tuckett & Son Co., Limited

BUILDING TOBACCO DEPARTMENT.

An idea is abroad among certain grocers that if they kept a fine cigar place, the average farmer who was running a big account with them would expect them to throw in a box of cigars every time he paid his bill, which might be at the end of every six months. That is certainly all nonsense. The average farmer, perhaps, would not like his thrifty wife to see marked down in his account "two boxes of cigars," etc. She would think they were on the high road to ruin. But the farmer and his sons could easily have the bill rendered to them personally or if necessary he could justify the expenditure and argue it out with his wife and daughters as compared with the perfume, fancy soap and immense quantities of fancy teas which the women usually champion. At any rate the grocer can easily be the architect of his own tobacco department.

Another good point for the general storekeeper to remember is that the antediluvian comforts which usually surround these stores must be crossed off the map. Get rid of that keg of nails on which the past two generations have been loafing on close by that old-fashioned stove all Winter long. The old yarn teller of the village would soon feel ill at ease if some nice, comfortable chairs were placed in the shop and some idea of cosiness added. The tobacco stores of the towns attract young men who have up-to-date ideas because they are up-to-date in equipment and management. A well-known preacher has said that as far as young men in the country are concerned, the general store can be frequently a source of great education to young men. Even taking for granted that he did not mean to apply this to the tobacco department, that is certainly one which has a most diverse variety of forces that would entertain and instruct.

A very strong plan for advertising tobaccos is the ash tray bearing on it your own name. Plenty of big manufacturers will make them for you and you may add to the inscription the line: "Blank's Leading Merchant," and then name the lines in which you are especially interested. All this could be done on a reasonably sized tray and the women at home would thank you a thousand times for supplying a repository for the husband and boy's burnt matches, pipe refuse and ashes. The great wealth distributors are the women and the way to boom up business generally is to please them.

Fine pipe cleaners are good ads, too, and should be kept in stock. They are usually sold at five cents a bunch and are invaluable to any home where the careless smoker usually tears strands out of the best broom in order to take the plugged tobacco out of the stem of the pipe.

There is as much ingenuity about making your tobacco department go as there is about the driving of the most strikingly utilitarian branch of the big grocer's or general merchant's business.

It seems especially discouraging to find manufacturers such as those who have their announcements running regularly in The Grocer see the amount of disregard which the grocer pays to his tobacco department. Be fair and make money.

SOLD CIGARETTES TO QUEENS.

A Paris tobacconist, who was sued for advertising himself without authority as purveyor of cigarettes to former Queen Margherita of Italy, proved that he regularly supplied her majesty with cigarettes. He incidentally declared that the czarina was a devotee of tobacco, she frequently receiving from London consignments of perfumed cigarettes. The Queens of Portugal and Roumania and former Queen Christina of Spain were also, he said, confirmed smokers.

CARE OF CIGARS.

Havana cigars should be kept in the boxes till used, and if possible at a temperature of about 65 degrees above zero. A good Havana cigar is a delicate article. The leaves will take up moisture like a sponge and will absorb any impure air or bad smell.

EFFECTIVE ADVERTISING

Hints and Suggestions for the Writers of Ads—Some Top Lines—Timely Themes for the Ad Man—An Example of Grocery Advertising.

DIRECTORY OF ADVERTISING TERMS.

Ginger—The life in the ad.

Sellingness—The "draw me nearer."

Per agate line—The size of type most newspaper columns are measured by (14 agate lines to the inch).

Scoop—When your competitor gets out of bed first.

Wormwood—Dead expressions, covered with moss, that some grocers use after some thousand grocers have used.

Bell-wetherism—Following the conventional lead.

"30"—What a writer places at the end of his copy to show he is through writing.

Stick-at-it—The ad flower every retail grocer should wear.

Head Lines.

Ontario is still the banner province for retail grocery head-lines.

Of course there are more grocers advertising in Ontario. But observations show that the western grocer has a tendency to omit head-lines, while the Maritime Provinces man doesn't always display them properly.

Too often one comes across well written ads boasting the most mediocre of head-lines.

It looks as if in some cases the advertiser allowed printers to put the head-lines on his ads or that having written an announcement the advertiser just scribbled down the head-line.

Now, the head-line should tell something. It really ought to be the ad in miniature.

Observe first-class advertisers' talks in first-class newspapers and you'll notice the head-lines show considerable skill in word selection and arrangement.

Below will be found a few timely head-lines that may suggest something for your ads :

New Potatoes from New Brunswick.

Choice Baskets of Grapes— I Have Them.

We Have a New Stock of Prunes.

Dairy Butter Prices are High, but the Quality of My Butter is Higher.

Do You Make Your Own Bread ? I Can Supply the Flour.

What to be Thankful For.

The opportunity to advertise.

The opportunity to adopt new methods.

The opportunity to get more business.

The opportunity to study selling as well as buying.

The opportunity to keep an ad diary.

The opportunity to compare present and past results.

The opportunity to state facts on paper in a logical way.

The opportunity to teach advertising to clerks.

Bradley's Ad.

Bradley & Son, Niagara Falls, adopt an effective way of appealing to the consumer — invite comparisons where they are confident Bradley value will give a good account of itself.

Their ad is well laid out and shows an appropriate head and sub-head. The "prelude" is pointed but unfortunately is not stated to the best advantage.

The paragraph beginning "Bradley's" and ending with "We're doing it" might have been worded as follows :

"We have built up a business that today is superior to any other grocery business in the Niagara district. We ourselves are natives of the district and believe in its future. We have worked to build up a business here that you might be proud of and profit by. Our friends say we have succeeded."

A Catchy Card.

Joseph Brown & Sons, Montreal, mailed a very attractive card to grocers and fruit dealers in connection with Thanksgiving trade.

The wording is full of snap, yet to the point.

The card is printed in green and brown.

C. E. Yocum & Son, grocers, Dunnville, Ont., have sold to W. E. Werner. Mr. Yocum and his son, who has had some experience in the business, are opening an undertaking establishment in Port Colborne, Ont. Mr. Werner, who already has a store in Dunnville, first bought the Yocum property, then the stock.

"Right Down to Business"

Is the watchword of the merchant who takes advantage of the opening of the Fall trade to increase his sales.
To such a few words are better than many, and require only the latter.

WOOD'S COFFEES

Their Uniformity attracts the Grocer;
Their Fragrant Aroma delights the purchaser;
Their Fine Body and Exhilarating Qualities proclaim their worth:
A combination that puts them in the front rank and holds them there.

Gratifying Results

In our advertisement in the Fall Grocer, we asked the all important question and pointed out the way to make it so. From the replies received, practically from all points of the Dominion, the question was undoubtedly an opportune one, and many were interested sufficiently to ask us for Samples of our which were promptly sent, and our request to test the sample personally brought forth one unanimous reply, all proclaiming "the finest Tea they ever drank," and they are now enthusiastic believers in the merits of BLUE RIBBON TEA. "As it Was in The Beginning"

The late Prof. Drummond tells us that prehistoric men sat in the sun and probably would have sat there and been burned to death if one chap, with a larger "thinker" than the others, had not discovered that when he got under cave-cover the heat cooled off a bit.

The story of prehistoric men, historic men and contemporary men, is after all, the same—brains and energy, counted at the beginning, count to-day.

1, 2, 3 years, from acorn to oak, from small manufacturers of maple syrup and maple sugar to the largest manufacturers of these products in the Dominion—Sugars Limited, Energy.

1, 2, 3 years from acorn to oak, from a handful of employees to a big concern with the most modern equipment and cleanest maple syrup and maple sugar factory in the Dominion—Sugars Limited, Brains.

N.B.—In those 1095 days you have the whole list of reasons why "Diamond Brand" is No. 1 on the Maple Syrup list, "Twin Block" No. 1 on the Maple Sugar list and why we have had to open branches all over Canada and in England.

Sugars Limited, - Montreal

There must be a reason why salesmen promise to match

TODHUNTER, MITCHELL & CO.'S

COFFEE

But they must make some awfully stiff statements to get your orders.

Then why take any risk when you can procure the old reliable blends that have stood the test of competition for over thirty years.

A String of Winners

The grocer who starts into the Fall trade with his shelves and storehouse well supplied with first quality canned goods will win out before Spring against his competitor who has been content with ordinary goods.

The housewife soon finds what brands she can depend on and tells her neighbors, and trade grows apace, not alone in canned goods, but in general lines as well.

That is The Secret of Our Success

We appreciated the rights of the consumer, and in our OLD HOMESTEAD BRAND have put on the market positively the finest canned goods ever offered the trade in Canada. The consumer did the rest. Here are a few leaders:

OLD HOMESTEAD CORN
OLD HOMESTEAD PEAS
OLD HOMESTEAD TOMATOES
OLD HOMESTEAD BEANS
OLD HOMESTEAD STRAWBERRIES
OLD HOMESTEAD RASPBERRIES

They're spic and span in every particular. Even the labels are enough to persuade a customer to try them. A trial always means a repeat order.

You should certainly put in stock the OLD HOMESTEAD BRAND. Ask your wholesaler to send you a few cases as a starter. If he can't supply you write us direct.

DOORWAY TO NORTHERN PLAINS

New Wheat Area Past Edmonton—Lodestone of Opportunity Draws Population from all Corners of the Earth—A Retailing Firm that Guarantees the Quality of its Goods.

(Special Correspondence of The Canadian Grocer.)

All roads in the west lead to Edmonton and capitalist as well as clodhoppers are attracted by the siren Opportunity. This northern metropolis, situated on the borders of a vast productive plain stretching for hundreds of miles into the north, is destined to be the Eldorado of grain and live stock. The settlers fresh from the Old Country, the American, the Eastern Canadian, all these keen, hardworkers come this way, and the time is not far distant when the wheat lands of Northern Alberta will be the premier lands of Canada. Five years ago Edmonton was an almost unknown prairie town; to day no town in Canada is better known.

It is not easy to give all the reasons for this. One powerful agent in the development of Edmonton is its ideal climate. "Sunny Alberta" has become a catch word and if I am permitted, I might add "Edmonton the balmy."

The most important and lasting success must come as a result of agricultural progress. This has been the agent that was most powerful in the past and the future prosperity of Edmonton depends on agriculture. Nature has laid out vast stretches of unparalleled crop-raising land away to the north of us and the quarter section is day by day becoming a more important factor in this towns' commercial life. We are already the commercial headquarters for scores of villages and hamlets.

As a manufacturing site Edmonton offers abundant attractions. What are wanted are more men with money and enterprise.

In the absence in the north of Theodore Revillion, jr., a leading western business man, and the moving spirit of the enterprising firm, Revillion Bros., the writer had an interview with the very able manager, T. W. Rourke, regarding Edmonton's future.

"I am very optimistic about the commercial future of this town," said Mr. Rourke. "It is becoming the objective point of many railways and it is the key to the Great North, which is far more fertile and better adapted to farming pursuits than the south. Before many years have passed the territory within a 300 miles radius of Edmonton will be settled and this increased strength added to the town's present commercial prowess will result in the building of a city of power and wealth.

"Edmonton is destined to become a great manufacturing centre.. The present method of handling freight by train is better, of course, than the old teaming method, but the railway companies are more anxious to lay rails and procure business than give satisfaction. Whether the goods are handled satisfactorily or not seems to be a secondary consideration. The fact of the lines being new may in some way account for this."

Mr. Rourke was asked to account for the marked success of his firm. He replied:

"Buying at the lowest market price for cash; anticipating the wants of our customers and in doing everything in our power to please our friends. The fact that we have connections and agencies all over the globe helps us imsensely as thereby we are kept in constant touch with all primary markets.

"You stock only the highest class goods, but do you think this always pays?" asked the interviewer.

"It always does, To sell honest goods the house must not only buy honest merchandise, but place its own guarantee at the back of every purchase. Everything handled by us is guaranteed to be as we represent it; this we could not do with inferior or low grade goods."

Revillion Bros. have some hundreds of trading posts and fine stations in the far north.

The grocery market has been much the same for the past two weeks. Currants are, if anything, dearer with some scarcity on spot. Cheese shows signs of advancement while sugar remains steady with a normal demand. The sugar most largely used here are Raymond's and British Columbia manufacture. We get most of our cheese from Ontario; there is, of course, a slight augmentation from local sources, but nothing worth noticing. Butter remains steady with an inclination to rise. The creameries along the line are becoming more numerous and the wholesale houses are, as a result, handling less butter than formerly. Eggs are plentiful and fairly cheap. Salt is steady with a distinct inclination to get firmer.

DEAN OF SPECULATORS.

Small Beginning on Fish—Left $3,000,000—Strict Rules of Living.

Edward B. Wesley, known as the "dean of American speculators, died at his home near Port Chester, N.Y., on October 3rd, at the age of ninety-seven.

Mr. Wesley was born in Leicester, Mass. His first money he made when a boy of 13 by selling birch beer and cakes to a crowd which had gathered to see General Lafayette pass. In 1825 he set out for New York, and reached there only by walking a large part of the way, as his money had given out.

Only recently Mr. Wesley told some of his early experiences. "When I arrived in New York," he said, "I went to the City Hotel to see if I could find an uncle. The City Hotel adjoined Trinity Church, and was at that time the finest hostelry in the city. Greatly to my disappointment, I found that my uncle had gone to Buffalo. The proprietor of the place was very kind to me, however, and helped me to get a boarding place where I paid $2 a week, and got very good board, too. My first employment was at the old tavern, but I soon gave up the job and went to Albany, working my passage upon the old steamboat Jefferson, which was then known as Queen of the Hudson. I finally managed to get a job as office boy with the steamboat company. From the Albany office I was advanced to a position in the New York office at $8 a month. It was not long, however, before I saved enough out of my salary to begin to speculate and I have been speculating ever since.

"The reason that I could save was because I never drank, smoked nor went to theatres like the other young men in the office. My first deal was in fish. I kept watch on the outside market, and when fish were cheap in New York and dear in Albany I could buy and ship it up on our steamboat. After that I speculated in butter, eggs, vegetables, and, in fact, nearly everything in the market, and at the end of my first year I found that I was more than $1,000 ahead."

After that Mr. Wesley began trading in notes and money, which brought him in contact with Commodore Vanderbilt, Jay Gould, Russell Sage, Cyrus W. Field and many other noted financiers.

He became interested in Standard Oil, New Haven Railroad and copper stocks, besides real estate in Virginia and New York, and the value of his estate is said to total $3,000,000. He was a director of the Union Trust Co., New York, and for 50 years never missed the weekly meeting of the concern. In Wall Street is was said that no man could read the ticker better. Until recently, he had never been ill a day, which is perhaps mainly attributable to his strict rules of living.

A PRACTICAL SUGGESTION.

If you find time hanging heavily on your hands sit down and write to all the catalogue houses for their catalogues, suggests an exchange. Don't use your own stationery, however, as they may not want to favor a competitor with a price list. When you get the books go to work and compare the prices with yours, adding freight, postage, etc. Then use some of the results in your advertising. Give the particulars. Don't deal in generalities. Give the name of the mail order house, the page the article is listed and your price and theirs. Call attention to a few staple articles every week and see if it does not help your trade. Don't make any misrepresentations. If the catalogue house can fairly beat you on an article acknowledge it or else cut your price. Do not substitute something cheaper nor simply surmise that the article offered by the mail order house is "no good." These concerns are not all robbers, by any means. Some of them are as honest in their advertising as you could want them to be. You cannot make any headway against them by calling them "thieves" and "robbers" and "cutters."

HERRING CURING ON B.C. COAST

Scotch Methods Being Adopted to Utilize Big Run of Fish at Nanaimo—Dog Salmon Curing Industry—Grocery Markets—More Onions.

(Special Correspondence of The Canadian Grocer)

October 24.

Herring will be cured by approved Scottish methods in Nanaimo this winter. The Nanaimo Fisheries Co., which has been operating in the herring industry has sold out to Messrs. Bell-Irving & Co., the important cannery firm of Vancouver. The new owners of the herring plant will adopt the most approved old country methods of curing and will not confine their attention to herring, but will handle salmon and other fish.

A second company is now organized at Nanaimo, mainly composed of Vancouver people, also for the purpose of handling herring in the approaching run. A site for a plant has been purchased and a factory will be erected in time for the big run which begins in the early winter.

The phenomenal run of herring which sets into Nanaimo harbor for many weeks every winter has long been a remarkable occurence and one which has attracted a great deal of attention among those in the fishing industry. For long enough there was but little use made of the fish and millions were killed and used for fertilizer. Fishery regulations prevent the export of fish turned into fertilizer, and that line has been practically abandoned. With the growth of the halibut industry the herring were required in increasing quantities every year for bait, the hooks on the halibut lines being baited invariably with salt herring. The fish caught in the winter are salted down and barreled being put away for use all season.

For the past few years there has been considerable effort directed to turning the big herring run to account as a food product. Each year has seen some advance, and last season Mr. Cowie the government's Scotch expert, with some girls skilled in the industry in Scotland carried on practical work at Nanaimo with the object of initiating modern commercial methods of handling the herring. The fact that the quality of the herring caught at Nanaimo is equal to the best found in the old country waters, is sufficient inducement to those who are taking hold of the industry.

Dog salmon a variety whose flesh is of very inferior grade, are being caught and cured in large quantities every year for the Japanese trade. Several firms including one large Japanese concern, are engaged in the business, and hundreds of tons of the salted fish are each season caught and after being salted, shipped to Japan. The dog salmon is a distinct variety and runs later than the sockeye and cohoe runs. It was formerly not esteemed of any value at all, the Siwashes alone catching it and curing it for winter provision. The fact that the flesh is dry and rather coarse, and lacking the rich flavor of the better varieties has prevented it coming into favor for food for white people. Indeed it is doubtful if it will ever be so used, though the flesh is entirely wholesome.

The Crystal Glass Co., is a new concern which establishes a new industry, not only in New Westminster, where a site has been secured, but in the province, being the first of its kind. The company which is made of shareholders who are business men in the coast cities, with some few from Montreal and Winnipeg, propose to make bottles for various breweries in the province and as far east as Calgary, also for the B. C. Distillery. When once established other articles of glass will also be produced. The company has a subscribed stock of $38,000 and will begin operations as soon as the balance is secured. The site is admirably chosen, the old factory buildings of the Automatic Can Co., at New Westminster having been secured.

Following Thanksgiving, the poultry market at New Westminster was overloaded, an extra big display of fowl of all sorts being shown and buying being slack. Prices went down with a tumble. Pullets sold as low as $4 per doz., hens at $6 to $8, ducks at $10 per doz. and geese at $1.25 each. No turkeys were brought in at all, but that was the only exception on the market.

Flour instead of being up in price as anticipated by dealers some weeks ago, is actually down 20 c.i.f. the local markets, $5.40 per bbl. being the quotation for standard brands. Shorts, for dairy cattle feed, is also down $1.00 per ton, the quotation now being $24.00 per ton. Bran, $23.00, wheat feed, $30.00 to $35.00 ton; Oats, $25.00 ton; Hay, $12.00 ton.

Fruits are getting scarcer in variety, and quantity is not very great except in apples, of which there are plenty. The Okanagan apples are in the market this year earlier than usual. Prices for apples vary from 75 cts. and $1.00 for cooking fruit to $1.75 for choice table fruit. Lemons are scarcer and bringing as high as $8.50. Late Valencia oranges bring $5.50. Winter varieties of pears are quoted at $1.00 and $1.25 per box. Some Ontario Concord grapes are in, and quoted at 40 cts. per basket.

In groceries conditions are about as last week. New raisins are now in as stated, and price is away up, with chances of even higher quotations before Christmas.

In produce, butter is still scarce in good quality. Much of the creamery butter from the Northwest has not been up to the mark this season. Local creamery is getting scarcer, and local dairy is also in small compass. Wholesale local creamery is 30 cts. and eastern creamery 27cts.

Local fresh eggs are now 45 cts per dozen and likely to remain so till after the first of the year.

The quantities of onions being produced in the local ranching districts increase every year, so that importations at this season cease. Prices are low now, because a surplus stock has been placed on the market. $1.25 per sack is the prevailing price.

Local lower mainland potatoes sold down as low as $13.00 per ton this week. Ashcrofts are $20.00 per ton.

NEWFOUNDLAND WINDOW DRESSING.

W. F. Lake Gets Diploma From Grocers' Exhibition.

A diploma for window dressing has been awarded by the Grocers' International Exhibition, London, (Eng.), to F. W. Lake, St. John's, Nfld. Mr. Lake is an assistant in Hon. G. Knowling's East End stores. It is the first such award to go to the Ancient Colony and is highly prized by the trade as a body.

The St. John's Telegraph says: "Mr. Lake, who is a most unassuming gentleman, was induced by his friends to enter this year's competition, and having forwarded the latest photo of his work, was more than pleased on receipt of his success. According to the London Grocers' Journal, which publishes the list of awards, Mr. Lake's photo entered the special Colonial class from which the diploma was granted on merit. The distinction is certainly one to be proud of and we join in congratulations to Mr. Lake and Hon. G. Knowling. No doubt next years' exhibition will see many competitors from this country for the coveted diploma of the special colonial class."

SCARCITY OF BRIAR PIPES.

Judging from present indications there is likely to be, in the near future, a scarcity of the genuine briar pipes. The real article is made in France in the Saint Clause District, the only wood from which the briar pipe can be made being obtainable only in that country. Advices from France state that the workers in the factory have gone on strike for higher wages, and manufacturers are not in a position to accept any orders, feeling that they will have trouble in filling those they have already booked. Under the circumstances the dealer who carries a stock of real briar pipes should at once see to it that he has a good supply, unless he is desirous of buying at the advanced prices which are sure to be asked.

NEW MOOSE JAW COMMISSION FIRM.

A new commission and brokerage firm has been started this month in Moose Jaw, Sask., by J. A. Simington and W. G. Cotes. Simington & Cotes have already secured a number of good agencies and commence business with excellent prospects. Mr. Cotes was formerly editor of the Moose Jaw Signal.

FLOUR IN WESTERN CANADA

Milling, Jobbing and Retailing— Situation in the Prairie Provinces— Methods of Handling—The Industry on the Pacific Coast.

By Resident Correspondent of The Canadian Grocer

In Western Canada, as in Ontario and the east, a big proportion of the flour consumed is sold over the grocery counter. Perhaps the proportion handled in the grocery and general stores is larger in the west than in the east for the reason that in the west the practice of making home-made bread has not gone out of fashion. Owing to the scattered character of the population the town and village bakeshops cannot attempt to supply the country trade to any large extent. Moreover, the distances in the west are so great that the big central bread factory sending out supplies to a big surrounding constituency is practically unknown. The farmer's wife bakes her own bread and she gets her flour from the general store.

Where does the general store get its supplies? In many places from the small local mill, for there are in the west, as in the east, a great many small mills whose output is sold in the immediate locality. Local patriotism, the desire to support a local industry, is often a big factor in pushing the sale of this flour. In addition to this flour from local mills there is also a large sale in the west of several well advertised brands put on the market by larger milling companies. This flour is sold direct to the retail trade in large quantities or in small quantities indirectly through the wholesale houses. The most enterprising milling companies put up their flour in 24½ and 49 lb. sacks, that is in eighth and quarter barrels, convenient sizes for sale over the grocery counters.

The Export Phase.

But the west being the granary of Canada now and aspiring to be the granary of the Empire in the very near future, has much flour to export and to send to the eastern part of Canada. With the erection of new mills of large capacity this quantity is being largely increased every year and a larger proportion of the crop is being ground in the west where it is grown. The big western mills have, therefore, to find a market for their flour. The Calgary Milling Co. in Calgary have been experimenting with shipments to China and Japan, and it is expected that a large export trade with the Orient will be developed. But the bulk of the western flour goes in the other direction, Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces taking large quantities and big shipments being made to Great Britain.

IN THE PACIFIC PROVINCE.

Never will British Columbia be a wheat-producing country. But that will not hinder the manufacture of flour in the province, and it is in the range of possibility that a very large milling industry will be established and that in a few years. Already one firm has definitely announced its intention of building a flour mill at Vancouver. Another milling concern now established in the interior has had in view the proposition of building a mill at the coast. The first concern, the Hall Elevator Co., Limited, has the distinction of having erected the first elevator on the Canadian Pacific coast. Their mill is to be erected in the immediate future and is to have an ultimate capacity of 500 barrels daily, though plant will only be installed at first for half that capacity.

The mills of the future will of course grind flour from the prairie provinces of Northwest Canada, Alberta and Saskatchewan. The beginning of this is the movement toward the Pacific coast for an outlet for the grain produced on the Albertan ranges. The second factor is the demand for flour and wheat products in the big markets opening up in the Orient. There has been a growing export trade to China, Japan and other trans-Pacific countries, and a large part of the trade has been in the hands of the mills of Washington, Oregon and California. These three Pacific states grow large quantities of soft wheat, and the flour from this, though of inferior grade to the hard wheat flour from the Canadian Northwest, has suited the market of the Orient. The Winter wheat of Alberta, not the equal of Manitoba hard wheat in producing a white, quick-raising flour, but still of fine quality, offers a Canadian competitor, and the quantity is increasing very rapidly. Other grades of wheat are grown in Alberta also, and the flour from these will find ready market in the home consumption of British Columbia and the north. The building up of an export trade to England via the Pacific coast is also a possibility.

Present Sources of Supplies.

At the present time the bulk of the flour used in British Columbia and also that shipped into the Yukon is from the large mills of the northwest, the Ogilvie mills at Winnipeg and Fort William, the Lake of the Woods mill at Keewatin, and the Western Canada Flour Mill Co. at St. Boniface, being of course the best known, as being the largest. Every mill of any size, however, in Manitoba and the northwest has done some shipping to the coast. The only drawback that appears to affect the small mills is the keeping up of the grade they establish. Once a market is formed the mill is under compulsion to keep it supplied and to keep up the quality, or lose the trade, which has in some cases been the experience of mills which started on a campaign in the province, before they had the permanence of the supply secured or its quality fixed.

Of course the standard of quality is high. That is fixed by the big mills, which can produce practically a uniform article year in and year out, and the year round as well. The features which affect this uniformity are few but important. To begin with the supply of wheat of high quality must be assured. To do this requires capital and storage capacity for the wheat. These facilities the big mills have, and the smaller mills must equip in proportion to their size. Then no flour is ever put on the market by the big mills from new wheat or until it has been milled a sufficient length of time to get "age." Smaller mills have often made the mistake of getting into the market of British Columbia with a really fine flour, made from well-seasoned, aged wheat, and then following it up a few months later, as the next crop came in, perhaps, with flour from perfectly fresh wheat. The results have been disastrous every time. Any neophyte knows flour must get "age" either in the wheat or after being milled. The former is the preferable way, though with care in handling it is possible to give the flour the ripening process.

Conditions (and advertising) have given over the trade of the coast, which includes the big Yukon trade, to the two or three big mills of the Manitoba wheat country. There are several others, larger and smaller, which have worked up a considerable trade, and there are frequently times when the smaller mills ship a few consignments, but not many of them attempt the market systematically, realizing the difficulties of competing with the better known brands.

The Okanagan Mills.

There are two flouring mills in British Columbia, both located in the Okanagan district, on the branch railway running from Sicamous on the main line to the lake. These are located at Armstrong and Enderby. The first is the mill of the Okanagan Flour Mills Co., the latter the Columbia Flouring Mill Co. Each is about 125 barrels capacity. The wheat used is largely imported from the northwest. There is some wheat grown in the district, especially close to the two towns where the mills are located, and the fact that there was wheat grown here originally led to the erection of these mills. Now, however, conditions have changed very materially. When the mills were first established there was only the small local trade to secure, and the use of the local wheat was quite sufficient. Now, however, there is market for very much larger quantities of flour than for merely local consumption. On the other hand for long enough the amount of wheat has been unequal to the capacity of the mills or the demands for flour. In addition to that the increasing demand for the land of the district for fruit purposes has altered the views of ranchers and the time is rapidly coming when little or no wheat will be grown, as the land is now too valuable for orchards to keep it longer in grain.

Selling Methods.

In selling flour in British Columbia all the mills, even the largest, have to adopt the direct appeal. Advertising by the larger mills and direct calls by a traveling salesman are the methods. There are some wholesale grain and feed warehouses and all the wholesale grocers handle flour, but the directing of public taste or inquiry is left entirely to the manufacturer. Those who are systematically building up a trade in the province have resident representatives here. A number of times the well known device of a "public demonstration" has been resorted to, especially at the New Westminster and Victoria exhibitions, to attract public attention to a special brand.

The retail grocery trade is visited regularly by the agents of the different milling companies, and the orders are placed as a rule with whatever jobbing house the retailer may choose. The whole supply of flour in this province almost is handled in the 50-lb. cotton sack. Even the carlots bought by large bakers are shipped in that form. For the upper country, where "packing" on horse-back is often the only means of transporting supplies into some lone mining or logging camp, for the up-coast trade, where supplies are dropped into a small rowboat or on a precarious landing by the weekly coasting steamer, and for shipment into the Yukon where there is much handling on and off steamers, the fifty-pound sack is much the most convenient form to handle the article. A hundred-pound sack would in many cases be very awkward and inconvenient, sometimes impossible, to handle.

While the larger cities of the province are mainly supplied with the "staff" from the big bakeries, the scattered nature of settlement, even along the line of railway, and the infrequent train service in many places, is a bar to a large wholesale trade in bread. But most of the small towns have their own bakeries. In the city trade much of the bread is sold over the grocery counter.

PECAN NUTS.

The pecan is a variety of the genus hicoria, or ordinary hickory tree, and its oblong, thin-shelled nut is one of the most delicious of all nuts. The tree itself is an ornamental one, being stately and symmetrical, and often attaining a height of 60 to 80 feet.

Although the hickory is common to all North America, the pecan has so far only been grown in the southern part of the United States. The increasing demand of the past few years, which is not nearly met by the available supply, has caused pecan culture to receive some attention, but it is as yet in its infancy. The main prejudice against it has been the impression that the tree required a generation to attain a profitable growth, and that it was delicate and hard to cultivate. In reality, it attains a nut-bearing age in from eight to ten years, and is quite hardy and tenaceous of life. It thrives in any except exceedingly sandy soil, and seems to have no preference between the lowland and the hills. It responds to cultivation, though it does not require much fertilization. In fact, the best plan has been found to be the planting of other crops, such as the common field pea, in the orchard until the trees reach a nut-bearing age. During the first year or two the tree goes more to root than top, hence its growth seems slow.

The trees are planted about forty-five feet apart, or from sixteen to twenty to the acre. Budded stock is the best, and Frotscher is one of the most popular varieties.

When eight or ten years old the trees bear from twenty to forty pounds of nuts. This amount increases yearly until the trees reach their full growth, when the average crop is one hundred and fifty pounds to the tree, and brings in a net profit of about $500 per acre.

The nuts ripen about the middle of October, and may be gathered from then until December. The smooth, hard burr in which the nut is enclosed cracks open and it is easy work to prepare the crop for market.

One of the few enemies of the pecan is the Fall web-worm. The much dreaded San Jose scale does not trouble the tree at all. The bark of very young trees is sometimes gnawed by rabbits, and in order to prevent this a handful of broom-sedge is tied around the bottom of the trunks.

WRITE YOUR OWN SIGNS.

There isn't any reason why merchants generally should not write their own signs. An entire outfit, including large and small letters, ink, rollers and everything needful for writing price cards or for writing show window cards, can be obtained at very low prices. With one of these combinations you can put price cards on everything in your stock, write show cards and call attention to many different articles. Price tickets are a great addition to window decoration. These combination sets are easily handled with good results, the only skill required on the part of the operator being the ability to draw a reasonably straight line and to stamp the figures or letters evenly.

EXPLANATIONS IN ORDER.

In a recent issue of the United States Consular Report, issued by the Bureau of Manufacturers, complaint was made by a Boston concern regarding delays in the delivery of goods shipped to Canada.

"The trouble is on the Canadian side," says the Consular Report. "A package shipped from Washington not long ago, with the charges prepaid to a point in Canada that could be reached in 16 hours, and where there is a custom house, was delayed one month in delivery without any explanation. In the same way American newspapers and magazines were two and three days behindhand in delivery at the same point. It looks as though it may be intentional to discourage purchases on this side."

PARTNER FOR STUART WATSON.

Stuart Watson, wholesale grocery broker, of Winnipeg, has taken into partnership with him A. Truesdale, who was formerly in the wholesale grocery business in Belfast, Ireland. Mr. Truesdale is calling on the retail trade, soliciting orders which are filled through the wholesale houses.

W. J. Carruthers, formerly teacher at Harwood, has purchased the store of W. Cochrane at Baltimore. Mr. Cochrane will continue his store at Burnly.

The Jeffrey Manufacturing Co., of Columbus, Ohio, have established a branch factory in Montreal, for the manufacture of canners' supplies.

SPICE AND COFFEE MERGER.

A. M. Piper & Co. Absorbed by Todhunter, Mitchell & Co.—Mr. Piper Goes Too.

A. M. Piper & Co., coffee, spices, etc., Jarvis street, Toronto, have disposed of their business to the old established firm of Todhunter, Mitchell & Co., Toronto, and Mr. Piper will shortly assume an important position in the management of the latter firm. Prior to his entering business on his own account, Mr. Piper was associated with Todhunter, Mitchell & Co. for about twenty years.

Mr. Piper grew up with the coffee and spice business. He served his apprenticeship with an American house, R. D. Van De Carr, of Rochester, and later conducted their branch in Canada, first at Niagara then at Hamilton, and later in Toronto. After ten years or so in charge of the Canadian business of this important firm Mr. Piper accepted a position with Todhunter, Mitchell & Co. as manager of their manufacturing department. A couple of years of that told upon his health and he went on the road for the firm. In that capacity he continued for fifteen years with marked success.

Mr. Piper then decided to strike out for himself and in company with James Langskill, one of the most successful retail grocers in Toronto, now president of White & Co., established the spice and coffee firm of Piper & Langskill. After some years the business was sold to Todhunter, Mitchell & Co., and Mr. Piper resumed his position on the road. In January, 1905, Mr. Piper again established a business of his own, Piper & Co., which is now merged in the larger concern.

Mr. Piper is about to start on a business trip through the Maritime Provinces where he has a splendid connection and where few travelers are better known. He is sure of a hearty welcome for his old friends will be glad to see him again.

A SHORTAGE OF CARS.

There is everywhere a great shortage of cars at present. The manufacturer, the wholesaler, the contractor and all who have use for the railways of the country to move freight are calling for cars to relieve the present acute situation. A string of empty cars behind a powerful engine is something eagerly sought after by all firms which have need of transportation. With the advent of the holiday shipping, the demand for cars will be very largely increased, and at present there seems no prospect of more cars being placed at the disposal of shippers. The different railway companies are doing their very best to keep up with the demand, but apparently it is impossible for them to do so. Every car they possess which is fit for use is now on the road, while new cars are being turned out from the car shops every day. But still the shortage continues.

There are many reasons for the scarcity. One of the principal is that there is a rush from all parts of the country of goods to port centres. Business houses are anxious to have their goods for export reach the Canadian ports before the close of navigation, and the railway companies are doing all they can to help business in their endeavor. Then the grain business calls for cars by the thousand, while the railways themselves have use for many trains for construction work. In all parts of the Dominion railroad construction is going on more or less actively, and supply trains and engines for work in the neighborhood are much required. It is hoped that there will be a little breathing spell immediately upon the close of navigation, and the present situation will probably experience some improvement, but is seems that a shortage of cars, and the consequent lack of good transportation facilities is something which must accompany the wonderful prosperity of the country. At any rate the railway companies do not seem able to keep pace with the rapid development now going on.

CRANBERRIES.

Cranberries prices are climbing rapidly because of greatly increased consumption and a shorter crop than was originally estimated. A few cranberries are gathered in the Maritime Provinces but they never get west of Montreal. The principal sources of supply for America are Cape Cod, in the east, and Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa in the west. Ontario draws its supplies exclusively from Cape Cod.

The garnishing of the American Thanksgiving turkey is said to have created a demand which aided the upward tendency of prices. An attempt early in the season to corner the Cape Cod crop, it is reported, failed badly. Some years ago Hiram Walker, the distiller, attempted on a rather large scale the cultivation of cranberries on artificially prepared land.

The American crop averages about 1,000,000 bushels, and of those 400,000 bushels are said to be required for Thanksgiving.

Originally, the cranberry grew wild and took its name from a resemblance its flower just expanding into perfection bears to the neck, head and bill of a crane. From "craneberry" to "cranberry" was an easy transition.

It was at Cape Cod that the cranberry was first cultivated, and soon came the discovery that in flavor the cultivated cranberry was far superior to its wild brother.

Sand and peaty ground form the real soil for the cranberry, and instead of fertilizing, the grower is obliged to give the vines or bushes liberal coatings of sand.

The place where the cranberry grows is variously known as the marsh or the bog, from the fact that it must be low land arranged with a system of sluices similar to those used for the irrigation of arid land in the west.

It costs not less than $300, and as high as $500 an acre, to get the bog ready. Then five years must elapse before there is any crop sufficient to give a return. But after this it is all profit, for the shrubs live and bear endlessly, getting better all the time.

Nothing could be simpler than planting cranberry bushes. A small handful of twigs is twisted together, and thrust deeply into the sand. They need no tending, but take root at once, and within a year send out runners. The planting is done in rows eight or ten inches apart. Gradually the space between the rows fills up, and soon the whole bog is one field of growing cranberries.

Flooding the bog answers the dual purpose of giving the cranberries the moisture which is an essential part of its life and protecting it from the frosts of early Autumn.

The old method of packing by hand is being superseded by the rocker scoops, with which one man can do the work of twenty-five.

The berries are cleaned and graded by machinery. At the end of their course there is a drop, and the sound, hard berries rebound into their bins while the soft and wormy ones, lacking the necessary resilience go to the waste box.

With careful weeding and watering, an acre will yield more than one hundred barrels of cranberries, and it has been calculated that in eight years an acre ought to pay back in full the entire cost, leaving all that follows as clear profit.

The earliest cranberries come from Cape Cod. Their picking begins early in September and lasts till severe frost sets in. In the Middle States and the west the crop is not so early.

POTATOES.

New Brunswick potatoes are getting a firm hold upon the trade in Ontario. There are large dealers in Toronto who handle no Ontario potatoes at all. The principal factor in the recent fluctuations in price has been the car shortage. Last Spring the American market was short and New York bought heavily in New Brunswick, creating high prices. This year the American crop is said to be sufficient for requirements south of the line. Last year, however, Quebec had potatoes to sell; this year it is buying. The yield in the Maritime Provinces is said to be altogether satisfactory, but there is a considerably increased area. The outlook appears to be that when freight moves freely again there will be plenty of potatoes and that the supply will be sufficient throughout the entire season.

OTTAWA'S SOCIAL GROCERS

First of a Series of Entertainments by the Grocers' Association of the Capital—Address by President Walters of the Retail Merchants —Cards and Refreshments.

A large number of Ottawa Retail Grocers enjoyed themselves on Monday evening last at the first social evening of the season in their rooms Royal Albert Hall. Appropriate songs were rendered and good speeches, readings and recitations filled up the excellent programme provided. The members of the Association were congratulated on the success of the event.

Henry Waters, president of the head branch Retail Merchant's Association, gave an able address emphasizing the importance of organization, and explained to the merchants the ammendments to the Criminal Code, which were being asked for by the association at the next session of the Dominion House and urged upon them the necessity of united action in having this matter carried to a successful issue. He also referred to many other important objects that could be obtained by all being interested.

Pleasing addresses were given by Ald. Ross and ex-Ald. Shouldis, President Forde and Tresurer Provost, of the grocers.

Ed. Wilton presided at the piano, as well as rendering an instrumental solo. Solos were given by Mr. Hickman, Stuart de la Ronde, P. Lamoureaux, Harry Duford, and a banjo solo by N. H. King.

Informal games of euchre were enjoyed by the card lovers, and light refreshments were served by Caterer Nixon, which added greatly to the hospitality of the evening. President Forde announced that almost sufficient names had been secured in favor of early closing and that the lists would soon be ready for presentation to the city council, also that the next meeting a month hence would take the form of a lecture on business system suitable to the retail grocery trade, part to be taken by an expert accountant, and part by an old experienced and successful grocer. He impressed on the members the advantage of attending regularly

WINNIPEG GROCERS WORKING.

Protecting Early Closing By-law—Pure Food Agitation.

The Winnipeg Grocers' Association, through its secretary, W. A. Coulson, has started a campaign against those who dodge the early closing by-law and those who import impure foodstuffs. Tuesday evening of last week, in company with a police official, a representative of the association visited fifteen or sixteen restaurants and fruit stores where groceries were sold after six o'clock. Informations were laid against the proprietors for prosecution in the police court.

Mr. Coulson says that most of the small restaurants carry a side line of groceries which they retail after six o'clock, thereby defeating the ends of the early closing by-law and cutting into the legitimate business of the grocers. The grocers, he says, do not mind any person selling groceries during legal hours, but it is unfair to them for restaurants to carry on a grocery trade after six p.m.

The association is also interesting itself in the pure food question and is starting a campaign against the importation of impure meats, fruit and fowl, as well as adulterated food of all lines. It has made application for a pure food law and has been promised the desired legislation. Large quantities of food stuffs, unfit for human consumption, it is said, have been shipped into the city of late and sold. Most of it came from American points and has been partially traced. Fowl which had been dead for a year and over, preserved by chemicals which were practically embalming fluids, it is claimed, have been received in Winnipeg, and last week one department store refused a large shipment of it.

Peddlers and transient traders have been watched and forced to take out licenses.

A Montreal firm which occupied sample rooms in a business block and were carrying on a retail traders' business, has been forced to take out a retail traders' license.

WINDOW DRESSING COMPETITION

Entries are coming in for the Canadian Grocer's monthly window competition, but we want more. It is simple —a photograph and a description of how the trim is done.

This is a chance for the clerk. The clerk who can trim a window well has a future in the business. There is plenty of latent talent in the trade that needs but a little stimulus to bring it out. That is what these competitions are for.

THINKS MR. LAWSON WRONG.

A traveller writing from Hamilton this week objects to A. H. Lawson's advocacy in his article on increasing trade in the Special Fall Number of The Grocer, of grocers putting up their own package goods. The writer says:—

Editor Canadian Grocer:—

I am surprised to find a correspondent in your excellent Fall Number advocating special packages as a help to grocers. The subject is not new and the older it grows the more the outlook for the special package. The writer has for some years been in close touch with the package Tea business both standard and special brands, and in very few instances has it appeared that the special was of any real benefit to the grocer's tea trade. Against this it may not be out of place to draw your attention to the marked success at times by certain standard brands, which have, through skilful blending and good advertising become very popular and easy to sell—trade builders in fact. A great number of instances can be shown where a well known and popular article has been put up under a special label, but in place of increasing the grocer's sales has actually lost business for him. Any attempt to substitute the often "fearfully and wonderfully made" blend and package for the well advertised and proved brand will often arouse in the customer's mind suspicions and direct trade to a small store.

Yours,

R. P.

GROCERS DID THEIR BEST.

Newspaper View of the Tournament at London.

An English paper describing the competitions at the recent Grocers' National Exhibition in London, says:

The tournament of the grocery world recently held at the Agricultural Hall, London, was a most interesting affair, and competitors, in a frenzy of emulation were to be seen wrapping sugar, roasting coffee, weighing butter, applying by letter for imaginary situations, and writing essays for the £1,500 worth of prizes offered.

The most sporting events, and those which drew the largest crowds, were the sugar weighing and wrapping competitions. Out of a bin of sugar fifty 1-lb. packets had to be weighed, wrapped, and stacked. Very severe tests were made by the judges. It was useless for a competitor to make a neat, square, artistic packet of sugar, if it leaked when shaken, and faulty "technique" of this sort blasted the hopes of more than one promising competitor.

To see the artistic temperament at its best, one had to visit the coffee-roasting competitors. There was a rapt, almost devotional, look on their faces as they ground their roasting apparatus to the murmur of the falling berries.

An expert explained the reason for the expression. "They are listening for the snapping of the berries to cease," he said. "When the berry is swelling with the heat and arriving at the point of perfection, a little cracking sound goes on. The moment this ceases the coffee is correctly roasted. Fifteen or thirty seconds too long means the begining of a burning process, which ruins the flavor."

The same expert, commenting on the coffee-blending competition, said: "Were we to give up chicory at once, half our public would cease drinking coffee. Pure Mocha would be nauseting to the majority of people."

J. H. Christie, one of the oldest and best known travelers in the Ottawa section, is seriously ill. Mr. Christie was associated with the late firm of Carter, Galbraith & Co. for many years, and cast in his lot with William Galbraith & Son on the dissolution of the old firm in January last. He has always been a good friend of the grocers.

Will Turpen, formerly Toronto traveler for the E. W. Gillett Co., Limited, and now in the Niagara Peninsula, is doing some special advertising work for the company and has not taken the place of J. F. Holden, as might be concluded from an item which appeared in The Grocer last week.

Montreal, Nov. 1, 1906.

The situation in the grocery trade is a healthy one. The fall trade has now set in and brisk business is being done on all sides. The scarcity of cars interferes considerably with the successful carrying on of trade, making it difficult for the jobber to ship the retailer's orders. But, when everything is considered, it must be admitted that a good average fall trade is being transacted. There are two markets of particular interest to the grocer this week. These are the sugar market and the dried fruit market. Sugar has experienced a decline of 10 cents since last report. In dried fruits interest centres on raisins and currants, but particularly on the latter. It is now said that a ten-cent market for currants is something quite probable. Prices this week are higher, as will be seen by the quotations. Valencia raisins are a little weaker in the primary market, but stocks here being very small, the price is firm. There is little new in canned goods. The tea market is one which is one of interest at present. Japan teas are before the eye of the trade very much. Indications point to still higher prices than at present rule. Molasses is very quiet, while trade in coffee and spices is fair to good. Evaporated apples are firm, and higher prices may soon be realized, but prices are unchanged. Maple products are also easier, while there is a firmer feeling in honey, which is very scarce.

Collections are good.

CANNED GOODS—This week there is little news for the grocer regarding canned goods. Some jobbers are still shipping orders booked some time ago, while other wholesalers say that they cannot obtain sufficient goods from the canners, owing to shortage of cars. On the whole, the situation is a fairly satisfactory one. Indications point to a scarcity of plums and blueberries later in the season, the canners apparently not having put up a great lot of either. Strawberries will, of course, also be short, none being obtainable even now. Tomatoes are unchanged.

SUGAR—Tuesday afternoon the local market declined ten cents. The decline effects all sugars. In the early part of the week, advices received were to the effect that the beet market was weaker. One of the large New York refineries lowered their prices on Monday. It is thought that there will be considerably more business at the lower prices, since it seems that a good many were waiting, in expectation of lower prices to buy.

TEA—There has been more inquiry for Japans during the past week, owing possibly, to the fact that fourth crop tea had been purchased for export to Manchuria, and all fannings and siftings having been made up into brick tea for export to this country. The price of low grade Japan teas has been advanced about a cent a pound. There are no lots af new tea held, all stock pisible in Montreal being old. Very common teas are selling around 14½c, while very low grades, which formerly were obtainable for 10c, when anybody would take them, are now bringing 13½c. Few Japan siftings and fannings are obtainable and higher prices are likely to rule. Lately there have been a couple of large invoices of Japans, Pingsueys and Gunpowders and Young Hysons change hands. Taking into consideration the present existing conditions, it is generally thought that considerable of an advance will shortly be made in all kinds of low grade greens. There is some demand noticeable for Ceylon blacks in London. These have showed some sign of improvement. Ceylon greens are scarce, few lots being offered. There is noticeable a little better inquiry for low and medium grade blacks. There have been recently, quite a few inquiries from the West for low grade China greens.

FOREIGN DRIED FRUITS—The feature of the market this week is the interest taken in currants. From present indications there will be a 10c. market and that at no very distant date. At present Filiatras are selling as high as 9c, dealers asking 8c, 8½c and 9c, according to quality. There are certain rumors around the trade to the effect that a large house in Greeece has failed. The Grocer learns from reliable sources, however, that up to the time of writing this firm has been filling local contracts in a satisfactory manner. The matter, as it stands now, seems to be simply that orders were sent to this house from New York and the low prices which prevailed a few months back. These orders were not confirmed, it is said, and now this concern cannot ship the goods owing to conditions existing in Greece. It was probably from this trouble, that the rumor of the failure arose. Local contracts, as stated, have been filled by this firm. Valencia raisins are a little easier this week. The market in Spain is somewhat weaker, quotations being from 1s. to 1-6 lower. It is too late, however, that the market begins to be on a reasonable basis, for much trade for the holiday season cannot now be done. It is true that even now Valencias could be imported, but there would be only a little over a week in which the jobber might dispose of them. Californian fruits are beginning to arrive in good quantities, although supplies are not yet as large as might be wished. Dates, the first of the season, are now quoted by some houses at 6c. The supply of the regular steamer ought to be here sometime next week. Orders for goods via the second steamer are being taken at advanced prices. Few dealers wish to give out a price list while the dried fruit market is in its present condition. They cannot count on prices remaining steady, and consequently there is a great deal of hand to mouth business being done.

POINTERS—

Sugar—Down 10c. and weak.

Dried Fruit—Quotations revised and higher.

Tapioca—Lower on the primary market.

Molasses—Firmer.

Toronto, Nov. 1, '06.

Business in the grocery trade is first-rate but the shortage of cars is causing some inconvenience, delaying shipments to both wholesalers and retailers. There is really nothing new in regard to dried fruit but the situation grows more interesting as the season advances. Goods bought now by wholesalers could not possibly arrive for the Christmas trade, so that both wholesale and retail trade are sized of the situation. The decline in sugar was not unexpected, and as the heavy consumptive demand of the preserving season is past will not incommode anyone. The market is weak even at the lower level.

CANNED GOODS—The situation is unchanged and the feeling is firm. The Canadian Canners are said to have packed tomatoes to fill only 80 per cent. of their orders at the end of July, and to be now buying tomatoes where they can get them. This is not intended as advice to load up with tomatoes. What the pack by factories outside the Canadian Canners has been is not yet known, but it is understood to be larger than last year.

Quotations are unchanged and are omitted this week.

SUGAR—Prices declined 10c. on all lines Tuesday. It is believed that this is a natural recession from the advance in raws occasioned by the possibility od damage to the Cuban crop as a result of the recent revolution. That trouble was spoiled by United States intervention. Then the busy season is past. But the dominant influence was the European beet crop. Willett & Gray said of raws toward the close of last week:

"The feature of the week under review is the steady and persistent decline of the European markets. The highest price of the week for beet sugars was 9s. 5¼d., on the 19th, from which point there was a daily decline to 8s. 10½d at the close. Futures also declined correspondingly.

"The change was most speculative on the exchange. The influences at work causing it were various, but especially the disappointment caused by the high beet crop estimates put out by experts and the statistical figures resulting showing a plentiful supply of sugar for the demands of the new campaign year October 1, 1906, to October 1, 1907.

"Also an important influence is the expectation of a full crop of sugar in Cuba."

The decline in beet continued this week to 8s. 9d. At the end of last week the world's visible supply was 1,050,953 tons against 1,069,149 tons a year ago.

TEA—The market continues firm.

COFFEE—The situation locally is unchanged. The valorization scheme is going forward and the prospects for the next crop have not improved. Willett & Gray assert "an advance is inevitable."

DRIED FRUITS—Most of the quotations have been adjusted to the upward tendency of the market. There is little practically new in the situation. Valencias have been offered to the trade this week at several shillings less than the market price. The offering is said to be rain damaged, but in any case the fruit could not be delivered for consumption before the middle of December or Christmas week, and the trade is well over by that. Quotations on prunes, citron peel, figs, currants and raisins are altered. Second arrivals of Tapnet figs are cheaper. Shipments of dates to arrive in a week or so will be lower than present quotations.

N. B. MARKETS.

St. John, N.B. Oct. 26, 1906.

These are very busy days for the Grocer. Markets are generally, and particularly in seasonable goods, in their favor. In staple lines values show little change. Arrangements for handling winter port business are being pushed rapidly forward. We hope this winter to see St. John used as a mail port, believing the West can be better served in the matter of mails via St. John than any other Canadian port. We expect to see the "Over Seas" mails come via St. John. This matter of sending eastern mails, which the C.P.R. has shown can be done so successfully via Canada, should be a matter of pride to the whole Dominion.

A Summer Across the Seas

BLACK—GREEN—MIXED

A man of some experience and reputation in the Tea trade, who has spent the greater portion of the summer in Europe, devoting much of his time in the London Tea centres, gave us the following unsolicited testimonial to "SALADA" Tea:

"I can unhesitatingly say, after close enquiry, experience and observation, "that I consider 'SALADA' Tea is, by long odds, the best value of any Tea I "have come in contact with, and it is little wonder that the sale is so great."

Can we send you an assorted sample case? We will be glad to do so. Yes, and guarantee the sale, too.

LIPTON PROFITS LESS.

A London cable says: Lipton, Limited, has declared a semi-annual dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, as compared with 6 per cent. for the corresponding period of 1905-6. This does not indicate that the decline in earnings last year has been stopped. Profits this year were the smallest in the company's history, showing a falling off of 15 per cent. from 1904-05.

For the first three years of the company, its dividend rate was 10 per cent. for two years 8 per cent., then 6 per cent.. now it is 5 per cent.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Dear Sirs :—

We beg to advise you that we have decided to discontinue handling all Packet Teas.

Briefly, our reasons are that we know we can serve the interests of our customers to far better advantage by paying special attention to our own Tea department, and it is only logical to conclude that if you save the enormous amount of money that is now being spent to advertise packet Teas, that both we and yourselves can give far better value to our customers.

The great success that we have achieved with our three brands

"PEERLESS" Ceylon, Flowery Orange Pekoe
"MAYBELL" Ceylon, Orange Pekoe
"MYRTLE" Ceylon, Green Pekoe

has encouraged us to eliminate Packet Tea altogether, and in these days of such tremendously keen competition the sole object of the merchant must be to reach the consumer at the least possible expense, and put the value in the Tea itself instead of diverting it into other channels.

Our Tea business has now developed to such an extent, and more especially on our "MAYBELL" Brand, that in most of the larger towns and cities we are making importations direct to our customers from country of growth. In this way you are getting fresh sweet Teas direct from the garden and in addition saving the local freight, which in itself would amount to a considerable sum in the course of a year.

These Teas are purchased by us in Ceylon from men at the fountain head of the business, and when you order any of our brands of bulk Tea you can rest assured that you will always receive

EXACTLY THE SAME QUALITY

In reaching the above conclusion we do not desire in any way to inconvenience our customers, and should you want to order any of the brands of Packet Teas, we will be only too glad to handle these for you as an enclosure.

We are,

Yours very truly,

CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN.

The weakness of cheese at country markets has further developed during the last week, when a substantial decline from the previous week's prices was accepted by country salesmen at the lower prices. However, the market shows considerable steadiness and it is now generally believed that prices will go no lower on finest quality; so-called "tail ends," or very late made foddery cheese, which are of very poor quality may, of course, have to be sold at lower prices, or according to their value as compared with finest Fall made cheese.

The local cheese market is still quiet and featureless owing to a continued light demand from Great Britain, it is, however, considered safe to buy and hold goods for a future demand at present prices. Many factories have already closed for the season, and many more will close this week, the supply of milk being insufficient to warrant a continuation of making cheese. Stocks of cheese in all Canada are very light and from our standpoint the situation is perfectly healthy and when the demand comes on again there is no question or doubt that prices will again advance.

Receipts in Montreal were last week 68,052 boxes of cheese and 7,949 packages of butter, against 71,655 boxes of cheese and 11,668 packages of butter for the same week of last year, or a total since May 1 of 2,101,220 boxes of cheese and 552,611 packages of butter, as compared with 2,061,483 boxes of cheese and 701,841 packages of butter for the corresponding period of last year.

Shipments from Montreal were last week 491,190 boxes of cheese and 4,791 packages of butter, against 53,155 boxes of cheese and 4,928 packages of butter for the same week of last year, or a total since May 1 of 1,979,521 boxes of cheese and 348,250 packages of butter, as compared with 1,873,045 boxes of cheese and 539,274 packages of butter for the corresponding period of last year.

We find therefore an increase in the receipts of cheese of 39,737 boxes and an increase in the exports of 106,476 boxes, leaving 66,739 boxes less in stock in Montreal than at the same time last year; in butter we find a decrease in the receipts of 149,230 packages and a decrease in the exports of 181,024 packages, apparently leaving a surplus of 31,794 packages in stock over last year.

The situation on butter is rather a remarkable one this year while there should be an apparent surplus of 31,794 packages, our available supplies are really short, prices have been good for the farmers and they have shipped everything they could into Montreal, leaving other places unsupplied and causing an outside demand for butter here. Recently an almost unknown transaction occurred here when a quantity of western dairy butter was sold in Montreal for shipment to Toronto.

A further illustration of the existing peculiar situation is that a quantity of western dairy butter was re-purchased in England and is now coming back to Montreal, all of which shows that butter is wanted here and that in spite of statistics there is no surplus here.

Regarding future prices, however, there is at present grave doubt whether there will be an advance, to some extent at least the production of butter will continue for some time to come. The extent of this is as yet an "unknown quantity," but, while this production is on, it is hardly possible to expect an advance in prices. Present prices are generally considered high and only, if an actual shortage is discovered, can we look for a substantial advance; meanwhile, we look for steady markets without much change in prices.

OUR OLD COUNTRY LETTER.

83 Fleet Street. London, E.C.
October 22, 1906.

There is always an element of delightful uncertainty in the tone of the London butter market; and it not infrequently happens that both buyers and sellers close down their week's transactions with expectations for the coming week, which are destined to be disappointed. This has proved the case during the past few days. At the time of our last report, the scant supplies of butter from almost all quarters was sufficient to justify holders in assuming a fighting attitude. And yet, although arrivals continue on a moderate scale, the amount of business transacted within the week has been comparatively small, and sellers have had to do a good deal of coaxing to bring their customers round to the point. Prices have weakened in consequence. As far as Canadian butter is concerned, the position of the market is one of decided quietude. Importers, in spite of the fact that cable offers are neither plentiful nor favorable, are not experiencing anything like a brisk demand, so that the price for "Choicest" parcels has gone down a shilling or two, the very best realizing at most 114s. This leaves a mighty small margin of profit for them.

As to the cheese market, the speculative element is very strong, due to the fact that the close of navigation in Canada is advancing and heavy supplies of cheese have come to hand. Of course, sellers are preaching a good deal to their customers about higher prices to come, but it must be confessed that buyers are showing no undue haste in believing what they are told. The volume of trade passing is certainly very fair, but to describe it as anything out of the ordinary would be absurd.

The state of the bacon market, as far as Candian hogs are concerned, remains pretty well unaltered. Supplies are short; demand is about on a par with the supply; quality fair, with room for considerable improvement.

With regard to bacon, it is interesting to note that a law has recently been passed in Denmark whereby the Danish Minister of Agriculture has forbidden the Danish exporters to employ any other preservative than common salt in the cure of bacon the use of borax being strictly forbidden. The enterprising minister, who was recently in England, evidently knows what is wanted over here, and it certainly would not be out of place for many Canadian curing firms to take the tip to heart.

WHAT CANADIAN PACKERS USE.

Saltpetre the Only Addition to Common Salt—Quite Harmless.

Inquiry was made by The Canadian Grocer as to what besides salt was used for curing by Canadian pork packers. F. J. Smale, manager of the Wm. Davies Co., said, "The only thing we use in addition to salt is saltpetre. That has been used as far back as the history of the curing of pork goes, and its healthfulness has never been called in question. Commissions inquiring into the question of preservatives have always dismissed the use of saltpetre as harmless. A very small quantity of saltpetre is used on a side of bacon. That is the only thing we use in addition to common salt and, so far as I know, all any Canadian packer uses."

The only use of the saltpetre is to restore the cherry red color to the thick parts of the side of bacon. The Grocer representative was taken by Mr. Smale to the curing cellars and shown how the saltpetre was used. The workman used a scoop sieve something like a housewife uses for sifting flour, only smaller, and with that a little pulverized saltpetre was dusted on the thick parts of the side of bacon. Naturally the thick parts of the side require more curing and on these the salt is piled quite thickly. This free use of salt tends to withdraw the color and it is restored by the saltpetre.

The first process in the curing of a side of bacon is to pump pickle into the thick parts with a huge hypodermic. The solution injected contains a trace of saltpetre also because it is largely what has drained off the sides already in the process of curing. Altogether, however, the amount of saltpetre used for a side of bacon about 60 lbs. is almost infinitismal if reduced to the amount a consumer would get in eating, say, half a pound.

Mr. Smale thought the Danes must have been using borax and boracic acid, a common practice by American packers.

PROVISION AND DAIRY MARKETS.

MONTREAL.

PROVISIONS—Compound lard has experienced an advance of a quarter of a cent since last report. Business is reported very good in both this and the pure lard. Pork is very firm, but an advance is not looked for at the moment, although there were indications that higher prices would prevail. Dressed hogs will soon be coming forward, while supplies of this nature will be obtainable locally in good quantities in a week or so. Export business is good, there being a rush in a small way, on account of the close of navigation which is not far off now.

BUTTER—There is no export demand for butter at present, the home trade controlling the situation. Consumption locally is very heavy, and a feature of the situation is the large quantity of butter that is going to different country points. Even dairy, after being received here from the west, is being shipped back to the west. The make is decreasing, and the situation may be summed up by saying that the home trade has the market pretty well in hand.

CHEESE—The market has been a little brighter during the past few days. At the reduced cost there is a little more inquiry from England, but this call for export cannot by any means be said to be active. Prices were rushed to a level which was too high a month ago, and we are now experiencing the expected reaction. Prices will not likely decline further, and much of an advance is not expected before the close of navigation. Shipments during the past two weeks have been on the light side, but stocks in the Old Country are still very large—hence the quietness.

EGGS— Arrivals of fresh eggs have now practically ceased, and to supply the demand which exists dealers are compelled to take eggs from storage. The call is for an egg around 20c. and to meet this demand the poorer grades are being sold. These will soon be exhausted, however, the higher prices will have to be paid for better goods. There are a few fresh selects, for which fancy prices are obtainable, 26c. to 27c. being the figure demanded. Storage No. 1 are offering at 20c. to 21c. There are a few No. 2 eggs available, so that the No. 1 are about the cheapest obtainable.

PROVISIONS—Lard is very firm at last week's quotations. Stocks of cured meats have not yet felt the effect of the increased run of hogs and prices continue as they were. Some packers are even asking an advance of 1-4c. on long clear because of the heavy northern demand. Beef prices have altered considerably in keeping with the market's usual course at this season. Hindquarters are cheaper and front somewhat advanced.

POTATOES—In New Brunswick, more interest is being taken this season than usual in potatoes. While there was a large crop it has largely gone into consumption, large quantities having been shipped to Ontario. Prices are already higher and further advances expected. We consider our potatoes the best grown in Canada, being much better than those grown in Nova Scotia, and, for shipping west, better than even those from Prince Edward Island. The Delewares command the best prices. There is a fine future for this line of our produce if our farmers will take advantage of it.

PROVISION SITUATION.

Domestic stocks of hog products continue light and prices still hold up. Lard is very firm and the situation has enabled the distribution in Canada of larger than usual quantities of American. long clear for the northern trade is said by some to be a short supply, but this cannot last long in the face of the increased receipts of hogs.

The Old Country market, on the contrary, is weak and declining. A cable received on Monday stated that Danish bacon was selling at 56s. and 57s., which is 7-8s. lower than last week, and packers look for a heavy and sharp decline in Canadian immediately.

This is not good for the live hog market. Prices were lower this week to a basis of $5.75 f.o.b. country points, which means $5.60 to the farmer. Next week the price to the farmer will be $5.50. The situation this week has been a little unsettled. There have been some deliveries on contract and prices, it is said, have been as high as $6.10, but it is expected that next week there will be a settled price. There was a good steady run of hogs last week. Deliveries the first part of this week were light owing to the weather, but they were expected to pull up towards the end.

PRODUCE FAILURE.

L. N. St. Arnaud, doing business as a produce and provision firm, under the name of St. Arnaud & Clement, has gone into liquidation in Montreal. The liabilities amount to about $28,000, while the amount which will be realized on the assets is not yet known. The chief creditors are Montreal firms. The Bank of Hochelage with $20,000 secured and J. Meldrum & Co., with $4,000 secured are among those interested most heavily. Other firms which are creditors are: The Whyte Packing Co., $812; Geo. Moore & Co., $230; Gunn Langlois & Co., $154; Gould Cold Storage, $143; James Strachan, $133 and Joseph Ward, $128. For rent there is the estate Stephens, $425, and another item is Paul Dufresne, $500.

PROMISES
PERFORMANCE

The situation that has developed in Dried Fruits, notably Currants, Sultana and Valencia Raisins is an extraordinary one. Short crops, short deliveries and late shipments are adding to the anxieties of importers who have sold "futures." Our sales of these and other fruits have been exceptionally heavy, due no doubt to the splendid quality that we have always delivered, coupled with attractive prices and the certainty of full and prompt delivery. We of course have heard in some instances of lower "quotations," still the business seems to have come our way. Why ?

Notwithstanding the adverse conditions referred to we shall adhere to the policy we have always followed, and every pound of Currants, Sultana and Valencia Raisins sold by us will be delivered in full, and in ample time for your Fall requirements.

We invite buyers to carefully compare the quality of our Dried Fruit shipments with others at equal or higher figures.

Grain Markets Very Quiet and Lower—New Estimate of Northwest Crop—Flour Quieter with Little Export Demand.

The car shortage continues a principal factor in the grain situation and the week has been exceedingly dull everywhere. Because of scarcity of cars and difficulty experienced in getting shipments forward some Ontario mills have had to shut down for want of wheat. Light primary receipts of wheat have somewhat encouraged the mill interests, but boding has been professional and confined within narrow limits. The world's visible supply of wheat at beginning of present week was 37,076,000 bush. against 28,339,000 bush. same date last year and 26,495,000 bush. in 1904. Last week the visible supply in Canada and the States decreased 89,000 bush. against an increase of 1,556,000 bush. last year.

The North West Grain Dealers Association have issued an estimate of the crop in the three prairie provinces as follows: wheat, 4,495,000 acres, 19.2 bush. per acre, 86,304,000 bush.; oats, 1,838,00 acres, at 41 bush. per acre, 75,358,000 bush.; barley, 546,000 bush.; 31.8 bush. per acre, 17,362,000 bush.; flax, 55,660 acres at 11.3 bush. per acre, 628,958 bush.

Statement of the wheat marketed to Oct. 15 is given as follows: 13,801 cars inspected, 14,905,080 bush; 1,725,000 bush. in transit not inspected; 16,650,000 bush. in store at country points; 100,000 bush. shipped out by G. N. R.; total 33,380,080 bush. The amount marketed at the same time last year 27,234,000 bush. Total storage capacity of country elevators, 36,117,000 bush.

BRITISH FLOUR PRICES.

Effect of American Competition—Larger Canadian Shipments.

A fortunate circumstance it is for the British consumer says the London "Grocer" that at the present time with another winter approaching, flour is undeniably cheap. Low as were prices in Mark Lane last October, they are now even from 1s to 5s per sack lower than then; and when the comparison is extended to the same period of 1904, the reduction in quotations is made to appear much greater, say to the extent of 1s 6d to 4s 6d on English makes, and from 5s to 10s per sack on American sorts. This severe depreciation in the value of United States flour is the natural outcome of the prolonged and repeated falls in market prices that have been going on within the last two years and dates from a time when American flour, up to 32s to 34s for best "Patents," enjoyed almost a monopoly in our metropolitan and provincial markets. Soon after that point was reached, a new spirit of rivalry seemed to be infused into our native millers, who determined to combat the encroachments of the foreign producers, and dispute their right to a permanent footing in the home trade of the United Kingdom. After a brief contest the British millers proved successful, and the importations of American flour in the first three quarters of the year fell from over 7,000,000 cwts. in 1904 to 2,835,700 cwts. in 1905. Lately, however, as a result of fresh energy being thrown into the flour industry in the United States, a marked recovery of lost ground has become apparent. Supplies of flour from America this year to September 30 have, consequently been immensely augmented, reaching 6,860,400 cwts., or more than double the quantity that came in 1905, and, as a matter of course, prices for what are termed in China, free to you customers

$3,000.00

MR. GROCER :—

With business modesty we beg to convey to you our new idea. Think it over please. Here it is.

We were spending about $3,000.00 a year in newspaper advertising. This cash went to the pockets of a few individuals, while the public got a notion about

Canada Flakes

True it was a good notion. We were pleased with it. But we concluded that better results would follow if we paid this money direct to the housewife—the buyer—and still produce this same good "notion" regarding Canada Flakes.

Therefore we bought at half the best retail value, fine china tableware and placed a piece in every package of "Household" the 25c. size. Thus every "Household" package of Canada Flakes contains the full value of food and the tangible value of the advertising as well. How does this idea strike you? Will you buy a case of "Household" now and test our sanity by its sale? Thank you.

"first" Patents have gradually fallen to 23s to 24s per sack. The arrivals of flour from Canada have also vastly increased during the past nine months, being 1,520,000 cwts., in contrast with 847,000 cwts, in the corresponding period last year.

COCOA SITUATION.

Cocoa has been advancing. The following mail advice from Trinidad explains the situation in that largely producing district: "The scarcity of supplies still continues, and on this account, although there is an active inquiry from all directions, no business worthy of note has been transacted since last mail. The weather has been extremely variable, heavy rains being followed by long intervals of sorching sunshine which has caused a general change of leaves and consequent large loss of young fruit. The crop in general is unusually backward, with prospects even less favorable than previously indicated, and under any circumstances the general opinion meantime is that it will be well into the New Year before deliveries on anything like an important scale can be forthcoming. In this position with such scant supplies in sight and the situation firm both in European and American markets prices locally are expected to rule higher than for a long time past."

NOTES.

James Hewer & Son, Guelph have sold their seed and grain store to G. T. Hannant, Milton.

New flour mills are being erected at Whitewood, Heward and Arcola, Sask., and at Pincher Creek and near Claresholm, Alta.

A. Waddell has returned to Toronto, after a trip through the west in connection with the establishment of an oatmeal mill in that part of the country.

George L. Hamilton, of Archibald Hamilton & Sons, grain, oatmeal, flour and seed merchants, Glasgow, is investigating Western Canada as a source of supply for the firm's business.

Up to October 20 receipts of wheat at points along the Canadian Pacific and Canadian Northern Railways amounted to 30,000,000 bushels, compared with 23,000,000 bushels at the same date last year.

A record grain cargo was carried by the new steel steamer William Snyder, which left Fort William on Oct. 21 with 380,000 bushels of wheat. This is as much grain as arrives by rail at both Fort William and Port Arthur in 24 hours, and as much as could be carried by ten trains of 38 cars each. The cargo was worth more than a quarter of a million, and for transporting it the vesselowners received $9,500. The Snyder is 550 feet long, has 56 foot beam, and a displacement of 11,000 tons. The steamer was completed a month or so ago by the Detroit Engineering works.

The Mooney Biscuit & Candy Co., of Stratford, have opened a branch in Sydney, N.S., which has been placed in charge of Fred. D. Lockey, their agent in Cape Breton.

The final report of the assignee in the liquidation of the Canada Biscuit Co., Toronto, shows that 51 per cent. has been paid to the creditors on their claims.

THE ATLANTIC FISH COMPANY.

The Maritime Merchant in an article descriptive of the Atlantic Fish Co's exhibit at the Dominion Exhibition, says: "The towering lighthouse of the Fish Co. was the most sweeping object which met the eye of the visitor at the Fisheries Building. Grouped at its base in various forms of package are specimens of the ninety-six varieties of food fishes prepared at the company's several plants. The Merchant feels quite safe in saying that there is no other company in Canada, that puts up for market as many varieties of fish as here shown. In fact, the writer with a fair knowledge of the general fish trades, knows of no other company in the world that compares with the Atlantic Fish Co's in variety of output. With the Halifax, Acadia, Atlantic, Bluenose and Dominion brands of boneless and shredded codfish, the consumers of Canada are fairly familiar, these having been widely advertised and sold throughout the Dominion. Several other products of the company are not so generally known, and it may surprise a good many people to know that the company prepares for market such a very long list of fish foods, including finnan haddies, kippered herring, mackerel, clams, lobsters, Digby chickens, bloaters, flitched halibut, Duff's Scotch cured and boneless herring, Labrador herring, pickled haddock, alewives and many others, of which space fails to admit the enumeration. The "Aberdeen Awa" brand of finnan haddies have an extensive local sale and have a prominent place in the exhibit. One feature of the display is that all the packages are shown open, so that the interested public can inspect the contents, the qualities o fwhich, being such that the co.-pany court investigation. While the contents of the packages on exhibit are of the highest quality, and in this respect fully represent the goods everyday shipped the trade, the casual observer cannot fail to note the neatness of the packages themselves, many of which are of a character that might well be given prominence in the store, being rather ornamental than otherwise.

Atlantic Fish Company's Exhibit at Halifax.

The curing and packing plants are situated at La Have, Lunenburg, Canso and Bay of Islands, Newfoundland. These various establishments are always open to visitors, and should the reader at any time chance to be in the neighborhood of one of them, he is invited to call and inspect the methods of fish curing. The company's fishing stations are located at Campobello, Digby Neck, St. Margaret's Bay, New Harbor, Drum Head, Arichat, L'Ardoise, Cape George,

FRUITS, VEGETABLES AND FISH

Several Changes in this Week's Fruit Market—Vegetables Little Altered—Quotations for Frozen Fish.

Fruit this week shows several changes. Late Valencia oranges and Verdilli lemons are practically off the market, while Canadian peaches are in the same condition. Canadian grapes are becoming scarce, and although prices are much the same as last week, the quality shown is nothing like as good. In fact supplies of all domestic fruits are lessening, and the Christmas imports of new lines are beginning. Messina lemons are now in. A trial shipment of 10 barrels of Dominican oranges will reach one of the large Toronto importers within a week. The Dominican is a new orange on the Toronto market, but is said to be something good. Florida oranges are improving rapidly, and there is a large range of Almeria grapes.

Cranberries have reached $10 a barrel, and prices in the near future, it is said, will range between $12 and $14.

Thanksgiving day, which will be observed this year throughout the United States on Nov. 24th., will of course mean increased demand, and with Christmas then less than a month away, advances are natural.

Arrivals of limes are very heavy for the demand, and first holders are prepared to sell at much less than the wholesaler's prices, which we quote. Limes have a good sale in Canada during the summer months, but at this time of the year, they move very slowly. This is probably owing to the fact that people are not yet educated to their use. Even during the lemon shortage last year there was a failure to make use of limes, although in most cases they would have answered the purpose.

In vegetables there is very little change. In the fish market frozen shipments are quoted this week.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS—There is considerable activity in fruit circles at the moment. Apples are arriving in large quantities every day and are being shipped in small or large lots all the time. Prices rule fairly steady, the different varieties being obtainable all the way from $2.75 to $5 a barrel. The supply of bananas is large, owing to increased arrivals in New York. The prices, in consequence, are very good for buyers. The finest stock is now obtainable for $1.75. New dates are quoted, for the first time this season, at 6c. a pound. Malaga grapes are on the market and dealers are asking $4.25 to $7 a keg, according to quality. Limes, peaches and plums are off the market.

VEGETABLES—Trade in vegetables is on the quiet side at present, which is not unusual at this season. All dealers are doing more or less trade, but large transactions are few and far between. Quotations this week are practically unchanged, beans being the only line quoted at a price different to last week. It is not now possible to obtain either wax or green at old figures, $6 a basket being asked. The Norfolk beans are now finished, and arrivals at present come from Charleston. Tomatoes are in good demand, but supplies are limited.

FISH—Some good orders have been shipped during the past few days by fish merchants. A brisk trade in most lines is the order of the day. Oysters are being shipped freely to all parts of the country. During the past couple of weeks the bulk oysters have been in short supply. Weather conditions are responsible, some bad storms having been experienced. Prospects are for a more liberal supply. Steak cod is very scarce, but halibut and salmon are in good supply, and prices are lower. Pike, dore and lake trout are being received daily. Dressed bullheads are now quoted, 9c. being asked. There is a good demand for bloaters, kippers and haddies at prices which hold firm. Lower prices would not be a surprise in the case of herring, which are plentiful. Shipments of green cod from Nova Scotian and Gulf ports are now being received.

GOOD APPLE CROP IN FRANCE.

Mail advices from France state that apple growers do not expect to have to compete with Canadian shippers this year. It will be remembered that in 1905 considerable shipments of Canadian apples were made to France, owing to the crop in that country being small. This is not the case this season, a good large crop being reported in France, as well as in Italy, so that the French market is sure to be well supplied.

EVAPORATED APPLES.

Impression that They Will be Short—Conditions Point Other Way.

There appears to be apprehension in some quarters that evaporated apples will be a short pack this season, but this idea has doubtless originated because of shortages in other dried fruits such as currants and raisins.

It would be rather strange that there should be any shortage of evaporated apples in a season such as this when it is quite apparent that there are large quantities of inferior apples which are suitable only for drying and evaporating. The dryers should with favorable weather, be in operation for about six weeks yet in which time a large pack should result.

Owing to the much lower prices of American evaporated apples there is no opportunity to export Canadian goods this season and this will doubtless ensure sufficient supplies for home consumption.

Germany has in the past been Canada's best customer for dried and evaporated apples but on 1st of March last when the new German tariff went into effect imposing a duty of about 2½ cts. per lb. on Canadian goods as against 1 ct. per lb. on American. Against this great handicap Canadian exporters cannot compete.

NEW FISHING ENTERPRISE.

Perch by the Ton Going from Goderich to Buffalo.

Something unusual is the catch of perch that has been made during the last week or so at Goderich. Perch-fishing has not hitherto been carried on, commercially there, and was commenced as an experiment, by J. R. Bruce, who sells to the Buffalo Fish Co. One express shipment consisted of thirty barrels,—over two and a half tons of the fish, and more or less heavy shipments are made each day. The fish are shipped as caught, packed in ordinary flour-barrels, with nearly 100 lbs of ice in each barrel. The net weight of fish to a bbl. is about 175 lbs. At Buffalo they are cleaned and the skin removed, and the edible portion re-shipped to many points, commanding, it is said, about 22cts. a lb, about five times what the original catch brings.

SOME GOOD HERRINGS.

The F. T. James Co., Toronto, have just received three carloads of choice Labrador herring in barrels and half barrels. They are an extra fine sample and will please the trade.

Collier Brothers' apple evaporator at Napanee was completely destroyed by fire on Oct. 20. The loss will be over $4,000.

White Haven, Petit de Grat and other places in Nova Scotia. Only the best Atlantic Fish are used, and in the preparation of the several brands of absolutely boneless and shredded codfish, the fish are taken fresh from the ocean, carefully cleaned and washed, salted in pickle then washed again before being skinned, boned and packed under the several brands. The natural qualities are fully preserved, and every ounce sent to the consumer as near as possible in possession of the properties they contained when taken from the depths of the ocean. Only the best of fish are used by this concern and wherever the trade mark of the company is found in connection with any article, the consumer has the assurance that the contents are the best of its kind that it is possible for human skill to secure. The sphere of the company's operations have been greatly extended during the past season, and a very useful work is being done in the development of the Atlantic fisheries and the extension of markets for the same. The influence of the corporation has already had a beneficial effect upon the industry.

TRAVELERS GIVE SCHOLARSHIPS.

In Australia—Retailers Organized—Their Dairying Season.

R. G. Eakin, a retail dry goods merchant in a large town near Melbourne, Australia, is making a tour of the world and incidentally gathering for the State Government of Victoria information about agricultural education. The Australians are wise to the progressive influence of education.

Mr. Eakin was a caller at the Toronto office of The Candian Grocer. After looking casually over Eastern Canada from a car window, Mr. Eakin inclines to the view that in the matter of agriculture, Australia has not much to learn from Canada. On the other hand he greatly admires Ontario's facilities for agricultural education, or rather perhaps, the organization and management of such facilities as there are.

Mr. Eakin is a member of the Commercial Travelers' Association of Australia, which he confidently asserts is the best organized association of business men in the world. They have both state and national organization, have an extensive club house in Melbourne, pay mortuary benefits and have instituted a number of annual scholarships open to children of members, by which a number of clever young shrewd women have put themselves through the university.

There is in Victoria a Storekeepers' Association, four or five years old, which has accomplished some useful work in the interest of the retailer generally. They secured the repeal of a law which prevented collection of a debt from anyone earning £2 a week or less and brought about the passage of a bill to eliminate from the Government railway's freight tariff some anomalies in the form of preferences to big shippers.

Australia is making great strides in butter production. The Government looks after the export business. All the butter for export goes to the Government cold storage warehouse in Melbourne where it is graded. With this Government guarantee of quality the butter appears on the English market.

The season of heaviest production there is August to the end of November. Their Winter is from April to August, but according to Mr. Eakin, two-thirds of the native Australians have never seen snow.

IRISH NATIONAL EXHIBITION.

Biggest Yet Attempted by Irishmen—$900,000 Subscribed.

Ireland's forthcoming International Exhibition, which will be held in Harbut Park, Dublin and will be open from May to October, 1907, and will be the biggest undertaking of its kind ever organized by Irishmen. The Exhibition grounds will cover 52 acres. More than 1,000 guarantors have subscribed to the guarantee fund, which now exceeds $900,000, and is constantly growing Work on the exhibit buildings has gone on so rapidly that they will be finished some months before the day set for opening, May 1, 1907. It is believed that 3,000,000 people will attend the exposition. France is preparing a French section which will equal that at the exposition at Liege; Russia has appointed an agent to make necessary arrangements for a large exhibit; Italy, Canada, and Australia and other countries will be well represented.

The charge for space will be $1 per square foot with a minimum of $25. A sliding scale of rebates on space rents will be allowed in order to accommodate large exhibitors. The rebates will be 10 per cent. when the total rent space amounts to $200; 15 per cent., when $300; 20 per ent. when $500 and 25 per cent. when $1,000. Forms of application for space and power may be obtained from the secretary, James Shanks, Ballsbridge, Dublin, Ireland.

Interesting But Not New

We mean the oft repeated tale of increased sales of RISING SUN Stove Polish in cakes and SUN PASTE Stove Polish in tins. This season history repeats itself and shows our sales of both styles of our goods very largely in advance of our sales for corresponding period last year. This interests you almost as much as it interests us because it proves for you our claims to superiority. Push RISING SUN and SUN PASTE: It pays to do it.

"Batger's" Strawberry Jam

If you carry this line of jam on your shelves it sells itself. The appearance of the new style glass jar is good and the Whole Fruit inside invites tasting.

It is made from the finest English garden strawberries and granulated sugar, by a firm that has been in the business for over 150 years.

Once tasted, Batger's Strawberry Jam will be ordered again. If you are not already selling Batger's, why not order a trial case of 4 doz. and see for yourself?

Good Advice

Don't delay ordering your full season's requirements of Fruits and Vegetables.

Better Advice

Do it now.

Best Advice

Stick to the best brands, viz : "Canada First," "Little Chief," "Log Cabin," "Horseshoe," "Kent," "Auto," "Lynnvalley," "Maple Leaf," "Lion," "Thistle," "Grand River," "White Rose," etc.

Yours respectfully,

CANADIAN CANNERS, LIMITED

Prejudiced in Favor of Old Homestead Canned Goods is every housewife who has displayed before her the handsome, richly lithographed package of Old Homestead Canned Goods.

She doesn't know for a fact that because the label is a beauty that therefore the contents are delicious. But she rightly infers that a firm so careful with the label they use, will likewise be particular with every other detail in the canning business, and the result—perfection.

That is the reason we advise all retailers to bring to the front. They will bear inspection. Inspection means a trial order, and a trial order means a permanent user of Old Homestead brand. It means greater consumption of canned goods, more sales and greater profits for you.

Old Homestead Brand Canned Goods will better repay pushing on your part than any other brand, because they are thoroughly reliable, always delicious, will please your customers, will sell more readily and more largely than any other brand.

Insist on Having Old Homestead, the Brand of Quality.

YOU WILL HAVE TO SHOW ME

That "SALADA" Green Teas are superior to Japans, said a critical dealer the other day, otherwise I must confess that I've little faith.

Well -- there's some hope for a man who is willing to be shown, but not otherwise. We gave him the most conclusive evidence in a "cup draw," he was astonished and convinced, and said that hereafter Japans would have to take a back seat in his store, as he was not going to load up with any stock that could not hold it's own in competition with the best.

May we prove their worth to you
Or, may we send you a sample to satisfy yourself ?

A Postal enquiry will bring a packet by return mail.

DID IT EVER OCCUR TO YOU to think how much money you could make in the course of the year just by pushing the sale of some of the smaller items of your stock.

Take JELLY POWDERS and FLAVORING EXTRACTS for example, goods that never aggregate much money in your stock, but which pay handsome profit in the selling. Try it and see how many packages and bottles you can sell in a day just by suggesting it to the customers in your store. The result will be, ever so much larger profits than can be obtained from the same effort used in selling heavy goods, on which your margin is so light. Particularly so, if you push high-grade lines like "Greig's White Swan Jellies and Flavors." Their quality is such that your patrons want more. Your profit on these is especially attractive. Try a sample lot at our risk and see how they go.

Why I Order Southwell's Jams and Marmalades

By HENRY BOLTON

HINT No. 1

It was just this way: I was tied up to one line of goods, and saw that I was a loser.

As the number of old country folks settling in my town increased my losses increased.

These people insisted on getting English Jams and Marmalades, giving as their reason they had been reared on them.

I brought up arguments in favor of my line, but only once in a while did I win a convert.

BUILDING A RETAIL BUSINESS

Attentiveness to customers should be instant, in season and out of season, from the moment the customer crosses the threshold of the store until he is out on the street again, writes Harlow N. Higinbotham, in the Saturday Evening Post. There is nothing which customers more invariably resent than indifference on the part of the storekeeper or his clerk. To go into a store and be forced to stand about without being recognized is a kind of treatment which goes against the grain of human nature, and will not be tolerated by the average American. Of course, there are times in almost every store when there is much business to be done in a small time, and it is absolutely necessary to keep several customers waiting. This does not mean, however, that there is any necessity for the proprietor or his assistant to fail to give a pleasant word of greeting to those who are obliged to wait their turn.

It is an easy matter for the storekeeper or the clerk to give a nod of welcome and a word of excuse to those who cannot be immediately served. The customer who has been pleasantly greeted and told that he will receive attention in a few minutes will wait cheerfully, whereas he would leave the store in ill-humor if his presence were entirely ignored. The ability to keep waiting customers in good humor and make them feel that they are not neglected is one of the most valuable qualities a storekeeper or a clerk can possibly possess. Just ordinary courtesy and attentiveness demand very little time, and they are far more valuable than flattery or argument in the sale of goods.

In this connection it should be said that flattery is a very poor crutch for the salesman to lean upon. The average American citizen is generally shrewd enough to detect flattery and invariably resents it. Instant and unfailing attentiveness are worth volumes of flattery in the up-building of a good trade, and the salesman who is always promptly attentive to the customer's needs and who does not "slop over" is a trade-getter and trade-keeper of the highest order.

Tell the Truth.

Perhaps it will be thought that a word of caution with regard to the over-representation of goods is entirely superflous and ungracious. I wish this were the case, but I fear that the observation is not at all out of order. Very often the zeal and ambition of the clerk carries him further in this direction than his employer would wish him to go. Again, there are those in the merchandizing business, as in every other business, who allow their desire for gain to impart an elastic quality to their consciences, and who lose sight of the fact that nothing can be more fatal to their final success than misrepresentation, no matter how mild.

As a sheer matter of policy, it is far better for the merchant to understate than to overstate the merits of his goods. When a merchant gains a reputation in his community for never misrepresenting his goods he is on the high road to success. He will command the trade of his neighbors and he will hold it against obstacles.

In selecting his clerks every merchant should give careful consideration to securing those who have tact, pleasing manners, and all that is included in the term "a good personal address." At the same time, it will be well for him to remember that a clerk may have all of these qualities and still be a comparative failure. Many a merchant employing quite a force of clerks has been perplexed by the problems presented by this matter of the personal equation. Here is a clerk, for example, who outclasses all his fellow-workers in personal popularity with customers. His graces of manner attract the patrons of the store to him to a degree which marks him as an exceptional favorite. In spite of this, the totals of his sales from week to week fall below several of his colaborers at the counter. He puts in as many hours as they do and works as diligently as they. Here, on the face of things, is a clear contradiction which is decidedly puzzling to the merchant. What is the difficulty?

In nearly all cases of this kind, and they are so numerous as to be almost general, I believe the cause of the trouble lies in the fact that the popular clerk, who has decidedly the lead over all his fellows, lacks in decision. Not long ago I saw an interview on this very subject in which the superintendent of one of the big State Street retail stores, in Chicago, hit the nail squarely on the head as far as this point is concerned. He related how he had been puzzled to reconcile the fact that the most popular clerk in the fancy dress-goods department took about third rank, so far as the volume of his sales was concerned The young man had a decided charm of manner which naturally attracted customers to him, and it was apparent to the management that this clerk had practically first call on a large percentage of the customers who came to the department to buy.

At last the superintendent decided to give his personal attention to the solution of this very interesting and practical riddle. To this end he stationed himself near the fancy dressgoods counter and began to watch the young man at his work. A young matron came down the aisle, passed a clerk who was at liberty to wait on her, and went direct to the young man in question. It so happened that the superintendent was acquainted with the woman, and knew, from having waited on her himself before promoted to an executive position, that she was not especially difficult to please.

The Fatal Fault.

She handed the clerk a sample of goods of which she was having a skirt made, and told him she wished to get the material for a waist which would be appropriate to wear with the skirt. He looked at the sample, turned around to the shelves and started to take out a bolt of goods, hesitated, went to another, and then to still another. Then he drew out two or three bolts, looked at them and finally shoved them back into place. After making several false motions of this kind, he at length returned to the first bolt of goods which his hand had touched, drew it out and displayed it on the counter.

To the keen eyes of the watchful superintendent it was apparent that the indecision of the clerk had communicated itself to his customer, and, after examining the goods in a somewhat indifferent way, she asked if he had not something else more attractive. Then he took down the bolts which he had glanced at in his hesitating pilgrimage along the shelves, showed them to his customer and discussed with her their relative merits. Still, she was apparently unsatisfied, and he once more ranged the shelves and brought down other patterns. There was more conversation and further comparison of goods, and for the third time he turned about and began to forage in a somewhat hopeless and hesitating way along the shelves.

More than once the customer seemed to be on the very point of decision, but finally she offered an apology, and, saying that she would come again, she left the counter without buying.

In the meantime, the clerk whom she had passed by had waited upon three customers and sold to every one of them. His manner of work was this: He gave very careful attention to the description of the goods wanted by his customer, and in each case asked one or two questions to bring out more clearly the desires of his patron. But in each instance after he had learned this he turned round and his hand went unhesitatingly to just the right goods. There was decision in his manner, and he placed the bolt of cloth upon the counter with the remark: "I think this is just what you wish." The watchful eye of the superintendent had taken in his movements as well as those of the popular clerk, and he was convinced of two things: first, that the taste or judgment of the clerk who made the three sales was no better than that of the popular clerk who failed to make his sales; second, that the decision with which the less popular clerk acted was the secret of his success.

The conclusions of this superintendent were, to my mind, entirely correct. He found out why the man who attracted the fewer customers was able to make the greater number of sales. Incidentally it may be added that the popular clerk remained at the fancy dress-goods counter while the other was promoted to the head of the department.

Closing a Bargain.

Time and again, in my own experience, I have seen this incident parallel-

ed. The gift of closing a bargain is by no means a common one, and it is left out of the composition of many clerks who are otherwise well equipped. And right here it should be added that without this gift all others are of no avail. No matter how skillfully the negotiations may be conducted up to the "sticking point," unless they go beyond that point they are useless. Though indecision on the part of the salesman is the besetting sin which generally causes his failure, there are other elements which contribute to this undesirable end.

One of these is the inability to shut out other matters from the conversation of the moment. Only the unskillful salesman will allow his customer to drag him into general conversation when he is actively engaged in displaying goods and attempting to get his patron's decision. This does not mean that it is not wise to chat pleasantly with customers about social and personal matters, but it does mean that this should not be done when once the business of selling is really in hand. Anything that distracts the mind of the customer from the vital point at issue is always to be avoided. Let all the "visiting" be done before the display of goods has begun.

Before leaving the subject of what the storekeeper should consider in the selection of his help, let me say that, as a general thing, the employment of relatives is to be avoided. It is not an over-statement of the case, I think, to say that traveling salesmen are well agreed upon the fact that when they find a storekeeper whose force is made up of his sons, daughters, nieces and nephews, he is considered as struggling under a distinct handicap, and his progress is watched with especial care. This is, perhaps, only another way of saying that the man who selects his assistants because they are relatives is not at liberty to make the selection on the broader line of their real qualifications for the work in hand.

CANNED MEATS TURN.

British grocers moving to recover their trade.

Grocers in Great Britain are now bent upon getting back their trade in canned meats, at a meeting last month in Manchester of the Northern Council of the Grocer's Association one speaker said: "that at Bolton, acting on instructions from the Local Government Board, an inspector had visited 324 grocers' shops in the district, and had taken 63 tins of goods which he considered a little doubtful. Samples of them had been analysed, and the result was that there was not a single trace of preservative or ptomaine in any of them. Considering that such allegations had been made regarding the canned goods trade, he thought such a result was highly creditable, and proved that if the public wanted pure food the safest things to eat were canned goods. If grocers would press upon the authorities to take samples, and then publish the result of the analyses in the local press, it would reassure the public, and prove that the food was pure and wholesome."

TARIFFS AND COMMISSIONS.

The United States government is sending a commission of experts to Germany to arrange terms by which the States will enjoy the minimum German tariff. Next to Great Britain, Germany is the United States largest customer. Trade between the two countries last year totalled nearly $370,000,000 of which the States sold nearly $235,000,000.

Less than a year ago Germany enacted a tariff law which provides for two rates of duty, one a general rate and the other a conventional rate, which is enjoyed by those countries with which Germany enters into commercial agreements. Upon representations made by the American government the time for the higher rates of duty to become operative against American importations was postponed until July 1, 1907, and in turn the President extended to German importers, the provisions of section three of the Dingley law.

Large American exporters to Germany have been stirring themselves to hasten government action which would prevent the operation of the maximum tariff against American goods next July. Germany's complaint against the United States tariff is in regard to rules and regulations rather than the weight of duty and no doubt is entertained that the commission will be successful.

Canada's trade relations with Germany are on a different basis. Since the absorption of Great Britain several years ago of the favored nation treaty according to Germany equal rights with the Mother Country in colonial markets, the Fatherland has been distinctly unfriendly. Of course the new maximum tariff is imposed against us. Before the unpleasantness arose the trade was increasing gaily, eight millions in 1901, thirteen millions in 1902, fourteen millions in 1903 Last year it was down to seven millions.

Germany has got the most of it. In 1903 our imports from Germany were over twelve millions and our exports thither just above two millions. Last year our imports were over six and a half millions and our exports eleven hundred thousand German trade lost nearly six millions; Canadian less than a million. There have been indications that trade interests would like to recover the lost ground. Germany's total importations are over a billion five hundred millions. Canada wants a share of it and is not likely to stand in its own light. We must, however, maintain our right to give whole British preference we please without consulting our foreign customers.

Parliament sits on Nov. 22 to give us a new tariff Mr. Fielding has promised it will be of the latest fashion, with minimum, maximum and general schedules. Doubtless the maximum will be imposed against American goods in view of the high American tarff against us. When Uncle Sam gets busy to save his trade with us, in 1905, a hundred and fifty-five millions, we may witness the interesting development of a tariff commission coming our way.

CANADA'S TRADE WITH FRANCE.

Canada's trade with France is not what it ought to be and might be made. The Dominion government pays a considerable subsidy for a direct line of steamships between Canada and France. The Department of Trade and Commerce maintains a Canadian Commercial Agent at Paris. The British Chamber of Commerce in Paris has established a Canadian branch. The economic, journal France-Canada of Montreal has recently opened an office in Paris.

All these things indicate an awakening of interest in Franco-Canadian trade but Canada does not appear to be reaping any of the fruits as yet. The volume of trade is increasing but according to the latest returns issued Canada's share grows smaller and France's larger.

The total trade with France in 1901 was $7,084,000; Canada buying $5,503,000 and selling $1,581,000. Last year the total trade was $8,712,000; Canada buying $7.201,000 and selling $1,511,000. That means an increase in Canada's purchases of $1,700,000 and a decrease in her sales of $70,000.

France's total importations for consumption in 1904 were about $750,000,000. Her purchases in Canada were a little over a million and a half. One article, canned lobster, composed considerably more than half the total. In the evidences of awakening interest and the wide room for expansion there is hope for a great development in the Franco-Canadian trade especially from this end.

BY-LAW QUASHED.

By the action of the courts in Montreal, the by-law regarding early closing of the stores, which was adopted by the city in 1905, becomes null and void. Under the recent by-law all stores, with the exception of fruit, tobacco, liquor and such stores, were forced to close their doors on Wednesdays and Thursdays each week at seven o'clock.

At the time it became law, most of the retail merchants in the city were in favor of it, but some, did not appear to be of the same way of thinking, for they remained open the nights on which the law said they should be closed and action was taken against them. One of the protesting firms took action against the city, declaring that the by-law was unconstitutional. It was showed by them, through their attorneys, that the by-law was null and void, because the enabling act, 57 Vict. ch. 50 was ultra vires of the powers of the Provincial Legislature, as an infringement of the duties of the Federal power to regulate trade and commerce of the Dominion. Further, the by-law exceeded the power conferred by the said enabling act.

The contention of the city was to the effect that the by-law was enacted for the benefit of public order and morality. The right rests with the provinces to regulate taverns, and to adopt regulations which will preserve public order and decency and prevent drunkeness. The court held, however, that there was no such question in the present case. It was not an instance where there would be any justification for interferance on the part of the Legislature, and besides this, the by-law adopted by the city was in excess of the powers conferred. Consequently, as the case stands now, it is not against the law for the retail trade to keep open after seven o'clock on the evenings mentioned.

ANILINE JUBILEE.

Aniline dyes in their relation to food stuffs have been much discussed of late and unusual interest attaches to the visit to America of Sir William Henry Perkin, the discoverer of the first of them—mauve. He came as the guest of the chemists of the United States to celebrate the jubilee of the discovery of mauve. Sir William was knighted by King Edward this Summer in recognition of his services to science and industry.

Since the dav fifty years ago when the eighteen-year-old youth saw a wondrous color shade come out of a dense black residue scores of perfumes and countless beautiful colors have evolved from the original discovery. Nearly twenty chemical firms throughout the world have made an exclusive business of coal-tar products, and in America alone it is estimated that $100,000,000 is invested in Sir William's discoveries.

Sir William telling a New York newspaperman of his discovery said : "I was in the laboratory of the German chemist Hofmann when I discovered mauve. I was then eighteen. While in an experiment to find quinine I failed, and was about to throw a certain black residue away when I thought it might be interesting. The solution of it resulted in a strangely beautiful color. You know the rest."

The controversy because of the United States' new pure food law regarding aniline dyes in food was explained to the eminent chemist. "I would not like to take sides in that matter," he said. "It it probable that there have been abuses of the uses of aniline dyes in food stuffs; in fact, I know there have been. But this is certain. The amount of aniline dye necessary to color a food is so minute that if the same quantity of strychnine were used it would be equally harmless."

DRIED FRUITS.

As there never was such a dried fruit season as this it is not remarkable if the trade finds it hard to accommodate itself to the situation. But it might now be said that the facts were all in, since, no matter what happened in primary markets, it would be practically impossible for a wholesaler to order fruit now and deliver it to the retailer in time for Christmas.

The first price made Valencia raisins was about normal. Last year the opening was on about the same basis, and prices steadily declined to two-thirds the opening price. With that experience still fresh in memory it is not to be wondered at if the trade as a whole bought hesitatingly.

The first estimate of the crop was that it would be about two-thirds of an average, which for ten years has been about 2,400,000 boxes. Each succeeding estimate was lower until it got down to one-fifth an average.

Currants have been much more difficult to gauge. Efforts of the Greek Legislature other years to maintain currants at a facetitious price have failed. Similar results were looked for this year. The watchers have been disappointed. With occasional rests by the way the price has plodded upward until it is a third to a half higher than the opening. Recently the market has been further disturbed by the failure of a large Greek house with heavy commitments in Canada and the States, and jobbers depending upon the firm had to scurry for goods to cover their own contracts.

Of course the abnormal situation in dried fruits generally helped currants. An aggressive advertising in Great Britain has had results, and a report recently received states that consumption in the Old Country is 50 per cent. greater than last year.

Sultana raisins are a poor crop, too, and the prices have soared, but it is claimed for this fruit that the price is partially the result of manipulation and some look for a decline, but the report given in another column is not encouraging. Some packers are trying now to evade their contracts and some wholesalers are likely to find themselves the victims of a speculative attempt to skin the market. The market is 150 per cent higher than offerings when the trees were in blossom.

The Malaga table raisin crop recently suffered seriously by storm, half the crop while on the vines having been destroyed, it is said.

In California the dried fruit trade is the victim of a combination of untoward circumstances. The Oregon crop, which about evenly shares with Santa Clara the Canadian trade, is turning out considerably smaller than expected, and is grading small. There won't be any 20-30 or 30-40 at all, and the supply of 40-50 will be limited. The result is a considerable advance in the large sizes of both Oregon and Californian fruit.

But the rebuilding of San Francisco has taken most of the available labor and lumber in California, and the lack of help and scarcity of box wood and other materials has been keenly felt in the fruit trade. To crown the difficulties has come the car shortage and a freight blockade, making anything like prompt delivery almost impossible. However, the heavy consumption of prunes does not start till January.

FIGHT FOR SUGAR PROFITS.

It will interest the grocery trade in Canada, wholesale and retail, to watch the contest about to be begun in the States between National Wholesale Grocer's Association and the sugar refineries The wholesalers are taking the initiative and the plan is simply to make the refineries declare themselves in favor of doing either a wholesale or retail business and the method to be adopted by the wholesalers is simply to throw all their business to retailers who will deal exclusively with wholesalers. The line, however, is not to be drawn fine and the retailers are to be allowed to supply large retail houses now buying direct, but a minimum order for direct retail buying is to be fixed and 100 barrels is said to have been agreed upon.

As far as sugar prices go the whole country is "wide open" and the competition among refiners is very keen. At present prices they are refining and handling for ⅝c. a pound.

A New England retailer recently advertised that on and after a certain date he would sell sugar "at less than cost." The lowest he could buy it for was $4.80 and his advertisement offered 25-lb. sacks of granulated at $1.20 and 100-lb. sacks at $4.80, in other words the New York wholesale spot price, adding nothing for freight charges. While he would deliver only when ordered with other goods he invited buyers to come to the store and "cart it away as fast as you like."

In Canada the present sugar arrangement assures the wholesaler 4 per cent. and cutting by retailers is discouraged. Not long since in a small Ontario town one man started cutting sugar as an advertisement. Other merchants complained to the wholesaler from whom "cutter" was buying and his account was promptly closed. The chief advantage of the sugar arrangement is stability. The retailer knows his neighbor is paying the same price he is. The grocery traveler now wastes no time selling sugar and that is an important consideration.

The wholesaler's 4 per cent. does not pay for handling the goods, but when he looks back a few years he knows he might be worse off. One of them speaking of the situation recalled an anecdote with which Sir John A. Macdonald illustrated the political situation toward the close of the MacKenzie administration. The people had voted out the Conservatives and were tired of those they had voted in. He said :

"It reminds me of one time I was going through a cemetery and I saw this inscription 'I was well, I would be better, now I'm here."

The Governor of Jamaica's report for the fiscal year of 1905 shows that in 1903 the United States took 150 times as much sugar as Canada. Now Canada takes 34 times as much as the United States. This is one result of Canada's preferential tariff.

EFFECTIVE ADVERTISING

Samples of Retail Publicity with Hints and Suggestions—Interesting Illustration of Combining Window Display and Newspaper Advertising.

The advertisement of C. E. Choat & Co., Halifax, here produced from a local paper is something new. In the first place it is an interesting example of the combination of the newspaper and show window forces in advertising.

Mr. Choat has received a big shipment of high-class English goods and he has taken this effective way of emphasizing the fact. "A Glimpse of London," is a catchy heading and expresses the idea to a tee. Certainly two such shipments in their original packages as a window dressing would be unique and worth the while of citizens of Halifax stepping out of their way to see. That top line though is a little too crowded, but the advertisement is a plain talk in plain type and is the kind of thing people will read.

"Quick Delivery," "Use the Telephone," are both strong, trade-getting, suggestive lines.

This ad. and the methods it indicates are worthy the consideration of grocers everywhere.

A GLIMPSE OF LONDON

We have just received a large shipment of High Class Groceries from CROSSE & BLACKWELL and HUNTLEY & PALMERS, and have displayed them in our large window in their original shipping condition. Over 2,000 bottles of JAM, PICKLES, etc, yet not one of them broken. A look at our window certainly makes one think they are on the other side.

AN AD. CHAT.

People want to know what you have to sell, and how good it is, and what you charge for it.

Generally speaking, every ad should quote a price, or a few prices. But a price means little unless the goods are described.

Don't try to embellish your ads with big words or flowery sentences. The great majority of your customers are plain, ordinary people, who can best understand plain, simple, concise language.

There has been a great deal of controversy over the question of long or short ads.

Some say an ad should be short, or people won't take the time to read it.

Others say it should be long, in order to make a big impression.

It's about as senseless as the "marriage is a failure" question.

Some marriages are bad failures.
Some are decidedly otherwise.
Some ads should be short.
Some should be long.
It depends on what you have to say.

Most advertisers make a mistake by trying to fill a large space when they have but little to say.

Many will make their ads too brief. They will spoil a powerful argument in order to get the matter into a dollar's worth of space.

There are so many more ways to do a thing wrong than right that the careless man usually does it wrong.

It is best to make most ads comparatively short, but it is never wise to weaken a good argument for the sake of brevity.

It would be better to have a dozen people read a long ad and be convinced of something, than to have a thousand people read a short ad that tells nothing.

People will read long ads if they are worth reading; that is, the people who are interested.

The best advertiser is the man who has the best common sense, and makes use of it.

He relies upon his judgment and not upon advertising rules set forth by some successful man whose circumstances were greatly different.

You should never say anything in an ad that you would not say personally to a customer.

If a woman were to enter your store, you wouldn't say to her, "This gigantic emporium abounds with an unmatchable and resplendant array of startling and stupendous bargains, at slaughter prices."

And yet a great deal of valuable space, in newspapers, is filled with that kind of twaddle.

Just recall what you said to the last half dozen customers you waited upon, and you will almost invariably recall good material for an ad.

Don't tell what your competitors can't do.

Tell what you can do.—Trade.

A WIDE-AWAKE GROCER.

N. E. Coppin, Mitchell, Ont., is a grocer who believes in advertising and in learning all there is to know about that branch of the retail business.

Mr. Coppin wrote to the editor of this department for a criticism on some of his ads., and one of these ads. embodying the editor's suggestions is reproduced on this page.

Mr. Coppin also runs locals after the style of the following:

"Fresh haddies and oysters at Coppin's grocery."

"Leave your order for choice table butter at Coppin's grocery."

"Gasoline, any quantity, 30c. imperial gallon at Coppin's grocery."

This is first-class retail advertising. It is systematic; it is forceful; it is continuous.

Give your local paper a little study like Mr. Coppin did.

A GOOD WRITING IDEA.

At several of the fall fairs various business colleges have had booths, at which an expert penman was stationed to write cards free for all who applied. The ads of the colleges were printed in neat type in one or two lines at the top and bottom of a card, about 2½ by 4 inches in size, and in the blank space the penman would write the name with all the graceful flourishes at his command. There was a big demand for the cards, people standing in line for many minutes awaiting their turn.

This idea could be employed by grocers on some special occasion and be the means of securing a good mailing list. People could be requested to write their names and addresses on cards. After the penman was through with the cards they could be preserved as an accurate mailing list to address future circulars, etc., to.

EDMOTON TRADE NOTES.

Business Brisk and Still Evpanding, New Buildings and New Firms.

There is talk here of a rush to the Peace River gold district, and if there is, Edmonton will be the base of supplies.

The Government has selected a site for the new legislative buildings, 25 acres of the historic grounds once occupied by the old Hudson Bay Fort. The buildings which will now be rushed to completion will have architectural pretentions. They are to be 290 feet by 200 feet, with a tower 140 feet high.

The King Edward hotel is being hurried to a finish with a view of having it open for business at an early date.

Revillon Bros., are erecting a new hardware store and expect to occupy it towards the end of the year.

The Edmonton Fruit and Produce Company have been appointed agents for Armond Company.

Nicholson & Bain, the enterprising commission house of Winnipeg, and Calgary, are extending their fighting line to Edmonton. They have a large connection with the jobbing trade throughout the Dominion, and their presence here will add appreciably to the

The Imperial Bank, which do an excellent business here, are opening another branch at Athabasca Landing. There is one thing about Edmonton which cannot be said of many towns in the Dominion, and it is this; we don't appear to harbor among us that most tantalising of business "bacillus" extended credit. The only reason of this happy state is the comfortable circumstances of the citizens.

TRADE AT THE PACIFIC COAST

Flour Mill Operated by Electricity—Trade Envoy from New Zealand to Increase Business Between the Colonies— G. T. P. Terminus—Market Notes.

(Special Correspondence of The Canadian Grocer)

Vancouver, Oct. 31, 1906.

The pioneer flour mill of the coast, operated at Eburne by the Easterbrook Milling Company, is run by electric motive power, perhaps the first in Canada to be electrically equipped. The present capacity of the mill is 50 barrels per day, and some additions to the present machinery are contemplated, which will bring it up to 100 barrels daily. The wheat ground is principally Alberta Red, though a small quantity of locally grown wheat (soft varieties) has been made into flour. This latter is said to be specially adapted for pastry flour, but the quantity grown is so limited and likely to continue so, that it will not be an important factor in the product of this or any other mill on the coast. The Eburne mill is but six miles from Vancouver on an electric road, and freight is transhipped by electric train at low cost, so that the plant is practically on the same basis as if operated in the city. The "Imperial" is the brand given to the flour produced by this mill.

New Zealand.

An interesting collection of exhibits is at present to be seen at the Badminton Hotel, where the official trade representative of the New Zealand Government, Mr. J. Graham Gow is now staying. Mr. Gow is on an extensive tour undertaken to promote trade between his colony and the Dominion, the desirability of increased trade being the greater now that the Alley line of steamers makes a direct connection between the two members of the Empire. For the next fortnight, Mr. Gow will be in the city, and his collection of New Zealand products and manufactures will be on exhibition during that time. It is his intention to seek interviews with the wholesale trade of the province, and possibly also interview the Board of Trade in the interests of his campaign of trade promotion. After leaving here, Mr. Gow will proceed to Winnipeg, thence to Ottawa, where he will present his credentials from his Government to Premier Laurier and the Cabinet, in the interests of trade expansion. It is his hope also that Canadian merchants and manufacturers will take up actively the question of promoting export of Canadian products suitable for use in New Zealand. He expresses the hope that ultimately, the direct line of steamers will have full cargoes each way, to the mutual benefit of his colony and Canada.

Activity in northern coast waters is increasing, and with it indications that the G. T. P. is taking more than a paternal interest in the industrial possibilities of the northern coast, with especial reference to their proposed terminus. As well known, a saw mill has been established at Kaien Island for some time, and as announced a week or so ago, the first big commercial venture will be floated very shortly with prominent people in close touch with the G. T. P. at its head. In addition, there is now made the statement that the fisheries of northern waters are to be exploited on a large scale by a company with large capital behind it, which has secured the cannery on Prince of Wales Island. This cannery was idle for some seasons, but was purchased recently by F. T. Churchill, who was interested in the formation of the Pacific-American Fisheries company, a few years ago. The cannery is but four hours run from Kaien Island, where the city of Prince Rupert is said to be located, and well situated to reach not only salmon waters but the halibut banks of Queen Charlotte Sound. The rock cod of northern waters will also be exploited, so that a large fish-curing industry in connection with canning operations, will be carried on.

Shipments of potatoes to New Zealand as well as Australia continue, owing to the high prices at present prevailing in the antipodean colonies. From New Westminster, Ladner, and other Fraser river points consignments of the tubers are being got ready for the next sailing of the steamer for New Zealand. The price current in that country at present is up to $40 per ton, while $15 is a good figure for the local lower mainland product at present, with a large crop to draw on for all demands.

This week, in the produce markets, higher prices of eggs are noted. The supply of local fresh eggs is diminishing, and demand is very keen. At New Westminster the wholesale buyers, could not get any this week or last week, retail demand at 50c. per doz. being so keen. The price is always high in the winter months, but seldom commences to run up so keenly until nearer Christmas holidays.

Local fresh butter is still in demand, and all offerings are taken up readily. Local dairy supplies are limited, but creamery make it fairly plentiful. Price runs at 30c. wholesale for creamery, and from 27 to 30c. for dairy. Eastern and N. W. T. dairy is very scarce, while creamery brings about 27c. per lb.

Apples are in keen demand for shipment to Alberta and other prairie points. Last year third and second grade apples sold locally at 50c. per box, while this ear, 75c. is the ruling price. Okanagan apples are now quoted wholesale at $1.25 to $1.75. Winter pears are scarce and bringing $1.25 and $1.50 per box. Grapes are $1.85 to $2.00 per crate. Late Valcenia oranges, $5.00 per case. Lemons, $8.50 per case. Pineapples recently received ex Australian steamer Moana, are quoted at $4.50 per case of half-a-dozen.

Markets and Market Notes

QUEBEC MARKETS.

POINTERS—

Maple sugar—Adanced.

Fish—Revised.

Beans—Declined 5c.

Foreign dried fruits—Currants and raisins interesting.

Montreal, Nov. 8, 1906.

A good average Fall trade is being done in groceries. There is more or less buying being done in all lines, but existing conditions are not conducive to special interest in one particular line. Sugar is rather quiet under the recent decline, although in some quarters there is talk of an advance before another decline occurs. The late deliveries of canned goods are now being made. Jobbers will soon have their full stock of canned fruits and vegetables. There has been an advance in Ceylon green teas, but otherwise the market is practically unchanged since last report. The feature of interest in dried fruits is the fact that the second direct steamer is now due in Montreal. Sultana raisins are very high in price. Valencias are easier. Californian seeded have again advanced. Currants are also higher. There is nothing new to report in coffees and spices, while peels are still firm. Maple sugar has been advanced. Evaporated apples are firm, and higher prices would not surprise the trade. Lower figures are expected in beans.

CANNED GOODS—The last deliveries are now being made by the canners, jobbers receiving their remaining stocks, orders for which were placed long ago. Although the wound is nearly closed, there is still heard complaint around the trade regarding the action of the canners in asking high prices for the goods this season. "There is no excuse for the canners," said one jobber to The Grocer, "in making the prices so high. We all know the tomato situation; we know the conditions in peas. Examples of the apparently unwarranted high prices are not lacking. Take pumpkins, which are costing 90c. and 92 1-2c. Why should the price have been made so high? There was plenty of profit for everybody at the old figure, 80c. If the canners desired high prices they might have worked up to them gradually, but I do not think they were warranted in asking the opening figures right from the beginning."

SUGAR—The market is rather quiet at present, but a fairly good trade is being done. In some quarters there is a belief that the market will advance before it declines, but this remains to be seen. At the moment it is without a feature.

TEA—The feature of this week's market is the advance in Ceylon greens, which are up 1-2c. to 1c. Teas generally are firm. Some inquiry is reported for low grade China greens, while there has also been some inquiry for medium and low grade Japans, and siftings and fannings. There are no Japans obtainable now under 17c., except, of course, the very low grades which formerly sold for 10c., and which now bring in the neighborhood of 13 1-2c.

FOREIGN DRIED FRUITS—The second direct steamer from Patras and Malaga, the "Jacona," is expected in Montreal daily. It is not likely, however, that the fact of its arrival will affect conditions existing, except that some stocks will be obtainable, for practically the whole cargo of dried fruit and nuts is sold. Sultana raisins are very high, being "away out of sight." There is a little easier feeling in Valencias to arrive, spot being cleaned up, as is well known. Currants are a little stiffer than they were last week, and prices are firm. Supplies of Californian raisins and prunes are now very good. Both seeded and loose raisins of all kinds are obtainable, though not in large quantities, shippers still being hindered by want of cars. Seeded raisins are again higher on the Coast, being 3c. above the opening price. Locally the price has been advanced about half a cent. Prunes are firmer. Other lines of dried fruits are normal.

EVAPORATED APPLES—This market continues very firm, although there has been no actual change in prices. Dealers are still asking 8c. for choice stock, and it is thought by many that a higher figure than this will soon be obtainable.

BEANS—Beans are a little lower this week. The market is an interesting one at present. Spot stocks are very low, but supplies should soon begin to come forward, and when arrivals commence it is probable that lower prices will prevail. In that case there would be some chance of export business, which is out of the question as the market stands today. It would not be surprising to see lower prices in the near future.

Montreal, Thursday, Nov. 8, 1906.

BUTTER—Market firm, but featureless.

POINTERS—

Hides—Cheaper.

French castile soap advanced.

Toronto, Nov. 8, 1906.

Business continues good, with collections satisfactory. The dried fruit situation continues unabated, and there is a strong tendency locally to advance prices. A feature of the trade that is forcing itself to the front is the canned fruit situation. For this time of year there is an abnormal demand in Ontario, and the demands of the West are said to be amazing. Strawberries and plums are already very scarce, and it is claimed peaches, pears and raspberries will shortly be in the same catagory. Sugar is still described as "weak," and the buying from hand to mouth.

CANNED GOODS—Fruits are attracting attention just now. The situation is unusual. The manager of one of the important wholesale houses described it yesterday as "unique." He said of peaches: "Threes are not to be had. There are some twos. The demand from the Northwest has been tremendous, passing all expectations. All the factories are cleaned out."

Strawberries were cleaned up months ago, and 2's are selling at $2.40 to $2.60 a box. Plums are very sacree; have been from the start, for the crop was a failure. There are still raspberries in the canners' hands. Pears also are to be had yet. One firm has advanced Bartletts 3's from the listed price $2.32 1-2 to $2.50.

Quotations are now given on cohoe and humpback salmon. There is a good steady demand even at this season.

SUGAR—Last week the market for raws, dominated by the European beet situation, steadily declined from 8s. 11 1-4d. to 8s. 7d. f.o.b. Hamburg. That is equal to $3.79 duty paid New York for 96 degrees test centrifugals. This week the market is on an evener keel.

Locally refined quotations are unchanged, and buying is from hand to mouth.

TEA—Trade is fair and without feature locally. London advices indicate a temporary weakness in Indians because of heavy offerings and increased shipments and a continued firmness in Ceylons.

COFFEE—Business is fair at unchanged quotations. The Brazil crop is now said to be turning out 14,000,000 bags against an estimate of 17 or 18 million, and the Government, under the valorization scheme, holds two millions, leaving 12 millions to meet a consumption of 12 to 13 millions.

DRIED FRUITS—Local prices for raisins show a firmer tendency, but advances do not appear to be general as yet. A quotation was obtained on Filiatras currants at 6 1-2c., but the usual price is 7c. to 7 1-2c. California seeded raisins are much firmer, but quotations as given are still being made. Valencias are being shaded to 8 1-2c. A new shipment of Malaga raisins has arrived, and quotations are $2.75 to $5.50 a box. The second direct ship from Mediterranean ports, the "Jacona," is due, and has a very light cargo indeed, the smallest ever brought, showing that Canadian purchases of currants and raisins have not been very heavy. Second shipment dates are in, and lower.

N. B. MARKETS.

St. John, N.B., Nov. 5, 1906.

Everything is blocked. Cars are late arriving. Tracks and yards being blocked. When they arrive, it is impossible to get them unloaded. Freight sheds are blocked. When in the sheds very difficult to get merchants to take delivery. They are blocked owing to the large arrivals of seasonable goods and the effort to make prompt shipment of goods sold to arrive. Business is good, has been good, and a successful Fall trade is assured. During the Summer the lumber shipments have been very large. This is the backbone of our province. In markets they are largely in sellers' favor. Dried fruit, in particular, show a sharp advance since orders were placed. Currants showing an advance of fifty per cent. Rice is held firm. Cream of tartar rather higher. All spices are firm.

OIL—Dealers are very busy at this season shipping burning oil. Values unchanged. In lubricating and paint oils demand is now rather quiet. Prices are firmly held. Gasoline, while not so freely sold, is scarce and high. Cod oil) continues to be received. Just a steady demand at even prices.

SALT—Liverpool coarse salt is quite a full stock here at present, and there are quite regular receipts. The Winter port boats are not expected to bring large quantities. Freight rates are high. There is just a fair sale. In fine, prices unchanged. This is the quiet saeson.

CANNED GOODS—Supplies continue to come forward very freely. In corn, peas and tomatoes full prices rule, with tomatoes a short pack. It is getting so usual to get but part delivery, dealers now order with that in view. Lobsters keep very high, some packers report receiving $13.50 per case. Salmon are held firm at full prices. Strawberries scarce. Gallon apples firm. New oysters quoted, prices are quite high. In domestic canned fish, market rather quiet.

GREEN FRUIT—A fair business in apples. The quantity coming from Nova Scotia is not as large as usual, and very few number ones. There were more and better New Brunswick apples than usual. Quite a quantity of Western apples bought, chiefly spies, and for outside points. Oranges rather easier. Jamaicas offered freely. Lemons, while high, rather lower. Light sale for Californias here. Early Malagas were poor, but are coming better. Canadian grapes cheap; rather heavy supply. Pears about done. Malagas and Tokay grapes offered. Cranberries higher. Cape cods about out of sight.

DRIED FRUIT—These are exciting times. New California prunes and seeded raisins here. In seeded raisins prices are again higher. Malaga table raisins in stock. These goods could not be replaced. Quantity of Valencias small. Prices high. Prunes in cartons are offered this year. Currants have gone to extreme figures. Trade fairly supplied. Package goods have all the sale. Apricots and peaches very high. Peels are high. Figs firmly held. Californias not sold. Dates firm. Old peanuts difficult to get. Shelled almonds much higher than usual. Evaporated apples are higher, and market very firm. Onions are a full stock, price unchanged.

SUGAR—Prices are rather lower. Dealers were somewhat disappointed, values did not go as high as expected.

MOLASSES—Values are firmly held. Fancy Barbadoes continues to have a good demand. Fair stocks here.

FISH—In fresh fish business is light. Prices for export for both dry cod fish and pollock firmer. Cod fish continue high. There is but little sale locally for pollock. Pickled herring are in full supply, prices rather lower. Smoked herring somewhat uncertain. Fair values rule. In haddies prices rather firmer. Large quantities have gone West.

FLOUR, FEED AND MEAL—Ontario flours, as expeted, are rather higher. Manitobas unchanged. Oatmeal is held at full prices. Package goods selling largely. Cornmeal is now being sold in packages. Oats and feed are high, particularly the latter. Beans unchanged. Demand in white beans is for hand picked. Yellow eyes rather higher.

Over 11,000,000 salmon were required to fill the 50,000,000 cans which represent British Columbia's output in this line for 1905. This equals 200 cans for every man, woman, and child in the province.

MANITOBA MARKETS

(Market quotations corrected by telegraph up to 12 a.m. Thursday, Nov. 8, 1906.)

With the beginning of November the trade in Christmas supplies has commenced in earnest, and Winnipeg wholesale houses are busy making shipments. The volume of business is reported to be considerable in excess of last year, and the only complaint which the wholesale trade have to make is as to the slowness of collections. Owing to the low price of wheat the farmers have been in no hurry to market their grain and, as a consequence, money is still reported "tight."

Prices are steady in most lines, with the tendency in most items towards an advance. California raisins (new crop) are now on the local market, and opening prices are very high. New dates will be here early next week. Woodenware is advancing about 10 per cent, but it is still possible for retailers to get supplies at the old prices if they are quick about it. The trade complain that it is almost impossible to get supplies of clover honey, although the buckwheat and wild flower varieties are fairly plentiful.

CANNED GOODS—Cohoe salmon is practically unobtainable. Prices are advanced. We quote:

NOVA SCOTIA MARKETS

Halifax, N.S., Nov. 6, 1906.

The grocery trade is good in the Maritime Provinces, business being reported as satisfactory in all quarters. Prices are pretty steady, the only notable change since last report being a drop of ten cents per hundred pounds in the price of sugar. This reduction is in sympathy with the recent decrease in all grades on the New York market. The quotations in Halifax follow: Granulated, $4.40; cut loaf (50 pound boxes), $5.05; Austrian granulated, $4.30; bright yellow, $4.20; and No. 1 yellow, $3.90. The reduction had been looked for here for some time.

The Thompson liner, "Jacona," with a big cargo of fruit, arrived here last week from Mediterranean ports, and discharged the following here: 8,505 packages of raisins, 280 packages of currants, 232 crates of onions, 10 boxes of almonds, 15 quarter casks, 5 hogsheads, and one butt of wine. The steamer, after loading 300 barrels of herring here, proceeded to Montreal.

FISH—The fish markets are now quite improved both abroad and at home, and there is a good demand for first-class stock. The fishermen on the western shore of Halifax county have been reaping a harvest the past week. Mackerel have struck in in good quantities, and the fishermen have so far met with good success. Three men secured 51,000 fish off Bear Cove which netted them a handsome return, the large fish being disposed of for 12 cents each, and the smaller run at 8 cents. Besides these, thousands of fish have been taken in smaller quantities. Most of these fish are iced and shipped from Halifax to the Boston market, where the large fish sell for 25 cents, medium 17 cents, and small 9 cents. Salt mackerel sold in Boston last week at $35 per barrel for large, and $22 for small. Large shore cod are quoted in Boston at $7.50 to $8, including $4.25 to $4.50, and dry bank (large) at $6.50 to $7.50, medium $5 to $5.50. Nova Scotia large pickled herring are quoted $5.50 per barrel, and medium at $4.50. There is a good demand for Nova Scotia prime large cod in Trinidad, where the price quoted is $29 to $30 for drums. Newfoundland cod is quoted at $22 to $23 on the same market. On the Barbadoes market cod is quoted $21 to $24 per cask, with the probability of the price increasing.

FRUIT—The fruit markets are very active, and with the mildness of the weather there is quite a lot of stuff moving. Apple picking and the gathering of all kinds of vegetables throughout the Annapolis and Cornwallis valleys is about completed, and everything has turned out pretty well with the exception of potatoes. Heavy shipments of apples are being made to the London market, and also to South Africa, the Elder-Dempster liner "Melville," which sailed from here last week, taking several thousand. Good gravensteins are now becoming scarce, and those now on the market are quoted at $3.50 for No. 1's; kings and blenheims range from $3 to $3.50, and No. 1 Bishop Pippins $2.50.

VEGETABLES—There is a good demand for potatoes, and large shipments are being made to the foreign markets, principally Havana. The schooner "Rescue" loaded 4,100 barrels at Canning and has proceeded to Havana. There is a light crop of potatoes in most sections of the country this year. Some attribute this to the fact that almost all the varieties of potatoes in the Annapolis and Cornwallis valleys have run out. The farmers are now introducing new varieties, principally imported from Scotland. They are said to be of superior quality and great yielders, especially one of the varieties known as Puritan. Nova Scotia potatoes are quoted here at 60c. per bushel, and Prince Edward Island 50c.

BUTTER AND EGGS—There is a good demand for both, choice dairy butter being scarce. There is very little butter coming on the market just at present. The prices remain steady.

Saturday afternoon last, the Dominion Commercial Travelers' Benefit Society held a quarterly meeting in the rooms of the association, Montreal. Dougall remarked that the society this year celebrated its 21st. birthday, and during the twenty-one years of its existence it paid out in death benefits over $200,000. CHEESE AND BUTTER BULLETIN.

Since our last issue there has been a very marked change ir the situation of the cheese market. Whatever the cause may have been, it is not due to a sudden increased demand from across the Atlantic, but the recent country markets all showed substantial advances in prices and, naturally, holders of cheese in Montreal advanced their ideas of values accordingly.

Conservative estimates of available supplies and a probable consumption during the Winter months leave us a shortage of about 200,000 boxes of cheese, and this shortage can only be overcome by advancing prices to such a point, where the consumption will be lessened, if Australian and other meats, bacon, etc., can attract sufficient consumption from cheese by being cheaper, our supplies may hold out until the new season's make appears on the market next year, but only high prices for cheese will bring this about, as hog products are also dear this year.

Last week's country markets practically disposed of the entire October make. Many factories are now closed for the season, and those still running have mostly turned to making butter. Last year large quantities of cheese were stored at country points. This year the country is practicallly bare, and stocks in Montreal are also considerably less than a year ago.

The production of milk has been very much lighter this season than last year on account of weather conditions. Considering receipts in Montreal, it would seem as though there had been a larger make of cheese and a much decreased make of butter, but it seems now that where cheese were held back at country points last year, they were sent forward this year so closely, that the make, even of cheese, may prove to be considerably less than a year ago.

Receipts in Montreal were last week 69,248 boxes of cheese and 8,049 packages of butter, against 62,666 boxes of cheese and 12,622 packages of butter for the same week of last year, or a total since May 1 of 2,170,468 boxes of cheese and 560,660 packages of butter, as compared with 2,124,149 boxes of cheese and 714,463 packages of butter for the corresponding period of last year.

Our exports were last week 71,058 boxes of cheese and 1,686 packages of butter, against 84,748 boxes of cheese and 10,323 packages of butter for the same week of last year, or a total since May 1 of 2,050,579 boxes of cheese and 359,930 packages of butter, as compared with 1,957,793 boxes of cheese and 549,597 packages of butter, for the corresponding period of last year.

These figures show clearly a very large falling off in the production of milk this year. When we consider that our receipts of cheese show an increase of only 46,319 boxes, while our receipts of butter decreased 153,803 packages, and, considering further as before mentioned, that cheese has been shipped into Montreal more closely than last year, the decline in the production of milk is much greater than even the above figures would indicate.

Butter is still in a state of doubt as far as future prices are concerned. Late country markets were slightly higher than the week previous. Fine butter is undoubtedly wanted for the home consumption, but, as there is no export outlet now, the question is whether our local consumption will be sufficient to absorb present supplies and what may be produced in the near future.

The cold weather now prevailing is still further curtailing the flow of milk. Cows can only be kept up by extra feeding, and feed is very dear this year, so that farmers feel rather disposed to let their stock run dry and give them a rest at the same time, and we would venture the opinion that, while prices may be slightly higher later on, and we may have no decline, there will not be much change either way for some time to come. Meanwhile we depend entirely on the home consumption, which is, of course, limited, and future prices depend largely on supply and demand.

OUR OLD COUNTRY LETTER.

88 Fleet Street, London, E.C.
October 27, 1906.

The condition of the London provision markets during the past week has been quiet, and for butter, cheese and bacon transactions have been on a somewhat limited scale.

Sellers are still finding it difficult to induce customers to come in and buy. In fact, a very cautious policy has been pursued throughout the whole week. Butter does not move easily, and prices are showing a drooping tendency. Large supplies of Siberian are on hand, and these are changing hands well, for the quality is excellent. Choicest parcels make as much as 106s., the lowest grade making 92s. Some new Australian butter has come to hand, but is not going very rapidly into consumption. For this the top price is 114s., which, by the way, is 2s. below what is being asked for choicest Canadian. Canadian dairies do not move well, although the lowest price stands at 90s.

The cheese market remains dull. Fortunately there appears an inclination, to judge from cable advices, in Canada to reduce the price. This seems a wise move, for buyers here are not particularly eager, and stocks in depot are getting uncomfortably high. Something like 246,500 boxes are now held in store. Buyers, knowing this, are evidently expecting lower prices to rule before long, and are therefore holding off for a while.

It is unfortunate that one should have to report that a bitter feeling exists along Tooley St. because of the unsatisfactory quality of Canadian butter. Such, however, is the case. As was mentioned before in this letter, not only have holders the greatest difficulty in disposing of their stocks of Canadian butter, but they are doing so, in many cases, at a dead loss. Last year, when quality was fair, they made no complaint, beyond the usual growl, at high prices and a very small margin of profit; but now, with mouldy butter coming in in large quantities and prices away up beyond what the produce is worth, they are something more than dissatisfied.

Canada's reputation in London for uniformity of quality is not what it should be, and it is not improbable that next season Canadian factories will find this a very cautious market indeed. At present sellers in London (at any rate, a number of them) are losing anything in the neighborhood of 14s. on every ton that passes through their hands.

It may well be believed that, were there a better feeling in favor of defensive combination and a little less jealousy amongst the importing houses on this side, Canada would have to pay dearly for the shortcomings of some of its factories. As it is, next season will find many firms over here, having been bitten this year, considerably less eager with their dealings with the Dominion.

The truth seems to be that Canadian sellers are paying too little attention to the future. Because they find themselves just now in a strong position, they think to have their own way. No doubt they will do so, at any rate at home. But, in their dealings with this market, where other sources of supply can be drawn upon, such a policy is a shortsighted one.

PROVISION SITUATION.

A month or more ago the present course of the market was outlined in the Grocer. It is pretty safe to say now that things will continue well as they are until January nears a close. Of course, products may go lower, but the main features fairly free deliveries of hogs and very moderate demand for products will continue.

Packers are paying for hogs, this week, f.o.b. country points, $5.40 to $5.50, and deliveries are rather light. Last week the deliveries were fair, but the packers have an idea the lower prices have induced the farmer to hold on a little. Just what the supply of hogs in the country is, cannot be definitely stated. Some sections report many, others few. The impression prevails that present receipts will about continue. Davies & Co. are not running their factory full capacity by any means.

Other packers stated deliveries last week were all the trade wanted to take care of.

The Old Country market has been going down at the rate of two shillings a week for two weeks, and the latest report is "steady at the decline." No one, however, will give a very decided opinion as to the future, except that probably after the holiday season, trade will pick up a bit.

Stocks of domestics are still small, but demand is very fair. Poultry and other lines have now the lead, and until the public palate is sated, a marked demand for pork products is not expected.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

PROVISIONS—Rather more attention is now being given to export trade, although prices are not conducive to good business, figures both here and on the other side being too high. Lard is unchanged since last week. Demand is fairly good.

BUTTER—The butter market is very firm at present. Shipments are being made by many houses to Ontario points, There is an active demand for both dairy and creamery. The high prices have the effect of keeping export business very low.

CHEESE—Locally the butter market is very firm, and indications point to further strength. Few of the smaller dealers have any stocks worth considering, while the holdings of the larger houses are none too great. The export market also shows strength. Last week there was an easier feeling, the market having declined to 12⅜c., but later it advanced to 12½c. and 12⅝c. at the boards both in Ontario and Quebec with a consequent recovery.

EGGS—Prices hold firm at present. Large quantities of storage eggs are being used now, preference being given to these over the limed goods, owing to the fact that there is generally obtainable a per centage of boiling eggs from a lot of storage, while none are found in limed or pickled eggs. PROVISIONS—The expected drop in pork products due to heavier receipts and lower prices for live hogs, has arrived. FOWL—At the end of last week there was a glut on this market, and large quantities were sold for what they would bring. As a consequence, it is expected receipts this week will be lighter. A great deal of scalded stock is arriving, and the loss to shippers when the market is crowded is considerable. Complaint is made, too, that many of the chickens and turkeys arriving are poorly finished, thin. There is still a good deal of low grade stock in dealers' hands. MORE HOGS IN QUEBEC.

The hog-rearing industry has made rapid strides in the Province of Quebec during the past year. The campaign in the interests of the bacon hog that has been carried on through farmers' institutes and other meetings conducted by the Department of Agriculture, together with the distribution at auction sales of improved swine of the bacon breeds, the high price of hogs that has prevailed during the season, and the bonus paid by the packers for animals of superior bacon type, have all tended to stir up the farmers to the possibilities of the industry.

STOCKS OF LARD.

Stocks of lard in Europe and afloat for Europe on November 1 were 137,000 tierces, against 170,300 tierces on October 1 and 154,000 tierces on November 1, 1905. The N. K. Fairbank Co., in their monthly report, say: "Stocks in America were even more depleted comparatively. On November 1 the total was 49,000 tierces, against 88,000 tierces a month before.

NOTES.

The St. Thomas Pork Packing Co. are erecting a new factory and abattoir.

W. F. Pope and Edgar Varney, Bromptonville, Que., have registered as the Bromptonville Packing Co.

The Manitoba Government has appointed a commission to investigate the alleged beef trust in Western Canada.

A company is being formed in Coaticook, with a capital of $12,000, to manufacture butter and cheese on the co-operative plan.

The two upper storeys of the west wing of the Wm. Davies Co's establishment at Front and Beachall streets, Toronto, were gutted by fire on October 21, and about $7,000 damage resulted.

The town of Aylmer has asked the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board for permission to annex property in Malahide Township, which includes a pork factory.

The Jones, Rutherford, Marshall Co., Limited, Montreal, has gone into voluntary liquidation. This does not in any way affect the Toronto firm of Rutherford, Marshall & Co., which will be continued as heretofore by Mr. Marshall.

What is said to be one of the best equipped abattoirs in America has just been opened at the Union Stockyards, Toronto Junction. Besides making provision for the business of the Levack Dressed Beef Co., Limited, one department of the plant has been arranged as a public abattoir, giving accommodation for all local butchers needing abattoir facilities and cold storage. The floor space is 87,000 square feet, and the cold storage chambers have a capacity of 5,000 cattle, 4,000 sheep, and 3,000 hogs per week.

FISH EXHIBITS IN HALIFAX.

Three excellent exhibits of fish ready for the markets of the world were shown at the recent exposition in Halifax, and attracted considerable attention. These were the displays of the Atlantic Fish Company, the Halifax Cold Storage Company, and M. Neville. All of these companies had their goods on display in the large fish building, which in itself was the cause of much comment, so varied were the exhibits contained therein.

SCOTCH HERRING HIGHER.

Scotch herring are now 4c. to 6c. higher than they were this time last year. The short catch is held responsible for this state of affairs. The quality of the fish is much superior this year to that of last.

MONTREAL

HARD WHEAT FLOUR TOO DEAR.

C. M. Kittson, Canadian commercial agent at Cape Town, says:

"For various reasons the importation of hard wheat flour into South Africa is declining, the chief cause of this is the fact that it has been quoted up to as much as $1.20 per 100 lbs., above the price of Australian soft flour, and also because of the increase of the duty on flour without a corresponding advance in the price of bread, which has caused bakers to employ a cheaper article in their dough-making—bakers who used to use two parts hard to one of soft are now reversing the proportion and using two parts soft to one of hard, and in some cases nothing but soft Australian flour, which is quoted at 8s. per 100 lbs. c.i.f. South African ports."

AMERICAN APPLE CROP.

Owing to the fact that the prices of Canadian apples, both fresh and dried, are influenced strongly by the size of the American crop, it is of interest to know that according to the "American Agriculturalist's" final report of the apple crop of the United States, published in its issue of November 3, the total is 36,120,000 barrels, against 24,000,000 barrels in 1905 and rather more than 40,000,000 barrels in each of the three preceding years. The figures arrived at are the crystallization of returns from correspondents in every apple producing section east of the Rocky Mountains. While the crop is thus by no means a bumper one, it is very much larger than that of 1905, and a good many apples are available for winter storage.

This is true particularly west of New England, including the important apple States of the Middle and Central West and New York. The five great apple counties of New York show splendid crops, and Michigan has a great many more apples than last year. This is also true of the South-west, which fell off to small proportions in 1905.

The New England crop is uneven, proving no better than that of last year, and estimated at a little more than 2,000,000 barrels. The crop of New York is placed at 4,900,000 barrels, compared with 2,800,000 in 1905 and 7,200,000 barrels in 1904.

CEREALS AND CONFECTIONERY

Quiet Grain Markets still Prevail—Wheat is lower—All producing Countries Contributing to the World's Needs—Situation in the Argentine

All grain markets have been quiet for another week. Wheat is lower. All exporting countries seem to be doing pretty well. The opinion that Russia's wheat production would be so far crippled by the disorders within the Empire, as to preclude the possibility of exports this year and the wheat plains of the Slav are contributing not as much as usual, but liberally to the world's consumptive demand. The Argentine is within about a month of the new crop. The wheat bulls in America when they plan a bulge issue reports to the effect that in the Argentine they are raising locusts instead of wheat, but the contradiction always comes to the effect that the prospects for a good crop are excellent, and that the locusts are still in Chicago. Immigrants to the Argentine during the first half of this year, totalled 90,000 and it is expected the total in the year will be over 200,000.

In Ontario cars are not as scarce at lake ports as they were. The railways seem to be making a big effort to prevent a blockade, and so far they have succeeded.

Australian wheat exports for week, 160,000; last week, 60,000, and none last year; since Jan. 1st, 21½ million; last year, 20½ million, and two years ago 29¼ million. Weeks exports of wheat from New York, 940,000; 159,000 corn, 54,000 oats, 22,000 barley, 37,750 flaxseed, 4,400 buckwheat and 18,300 flour.

More than half the receipts of wheat at Minneapolis and Duluth in October were durum. In some sections a very important consideration is that the durum plant will not only exist but actually thrive with a degree of moisture so scant as to prove destructive to the milling variety. The plant is of Russian origin and is growing in favor in both the Canadian and American Northwest. The durum yield this year is variously estimated at 35 to 45 millions.

Official records show the quantity of wheat delivered by farmers on the Canadian Pacific and Northern Pacific and C.P.R. up to date is approximately 30,000,000 bushels, compared with 23,000,000 for the same period last year, and therefore an increase of 7 million over last year. Quantity of grain moved forward to the head of the lake up to this time last 12 million, against about 9½ million this year; therefore, while they have received 7 million more from farmers there have been shipped out 2½ million less, this disparity is undoubtedly due largely to shortage of cars.

MILLING AMALGAMATION.

A business deal of great importance to the town of Carberry, Man., was put through last week when the James Innes Milling Co. of Hartney, Man., acquired the roller mills in Carberry. For some months the Carberry mills have been idle, but under the new management the will be run at their full capacity.

The amalgamation makes the James Innes Milling Co. one of the strong milling companies in the West, as the combined output will now amount to 500 barrels per day. The firm have always done a large export trade, and Mr. Innes is planning a trip to England in December to extend his connection in that country.

R. L. D. Taylor, of Toronto, and D. W. Black, W. D. Muirhead, Edith C. Black and Wilhelmina Muirhead, of Fort William, have been incorporated by the Ontario Government under the name of Superior Barley Mills, to deal in grain and grain products. The capital is $40,000, and the head office of the company will be in Fort William.

The new Calgary biscuit factory was scheduled to begin operations on November 1.

The Vancouver Milling and Grain Company, Limited, is endeavoring to acquire the Hall Elevator and Grain Company, of Vancouver.

"Yet another said: 'I'll pay you Saturday or go to hell.' He's gone!

"It makes a man inclined almost to forego credit altogether."

THREE GOOD EXCUSES FOR WORKING.

Here is a boy whose father sends him each week a copy of the Canadian Grocer.

The proud sire of this trio is a traveller, W. T. Chapman, a Nova Scotian, who is making good in Western Ontario, selling Red Rose tea. The family continue to reside at Salisbury, N.S. The picture was taken several years ago, and the baby, Anah, is now at school.

She and her brother George are each at the head of their respective classes, and the older girl, Eugenia, is second from the head. That's a pretty good record for one small family. The photograph, from which the picture was produced, was taken from Mr. Chapman's grip, and he was not easily persuaded to forgo the custody of it for a day or two.

FRUITS, VEGETABLES AND FISH

Trial Shipment of Dominion Fruit Arrives in Toronto—Domestic Vegetables Replaced by Imported—Scarcity of Fish Reported.

Montreal reports state that arrivals of bananas are much lighter than last week. The Toronto market, on the other hand, is well supplied, some heavy shipments having come in during the week. The Mexican oranges expected in Toronto have begun to arrive. Despatches state that shipping of naval oranges from Northern California started on November 1st. Southern navals will not be in condition to move much before December 1st. Nova Scotia cranberries are quoted on the Montreal market. Cape Cods are still on the rise.

The trial shipment of Dominican oranges, sweet limes and grape fruit, which reached Toronto this week gives promise of great things. The orange is close-grained, and remarkably sweet and juicy, with very thin skin, and is of good size and color. A sweet lime seems an anomaly, but samples prove that the name is appropriate. In shape the sweet lime is similar to the bitter orange, being flattened at the top and bottom; it is also similar in size. The Dominican fruit is not yet listed, but it is thought that considerable importations will soon begin.

Canadian importers have received news of damage to the grape crop in Spain caused by recent heavy rains there, but the weather is now favorable and even better shipments than have so far arrived are expected shortly.

Fred. Barker gives the following figures regarding the apple export trade for the week ending November 3rd.: Shipments from Canadian ports, 58,948 barrels; from United States ports, 91,557; total, 150,505 barrels. The total for the same week of 1905 amounted to 123,297 barrels. This year's exports to date amount to 748,067 barrels, compared with 975,247 barrels for the same period last year. Among the shipments from Halifax last week were 1,200 barrels to Capetown, South Africa.

In the vegetable market most of the domestic lines are being replaced by imported goods. The scarcity of peppers is somewhat curious.

Scarcity of fish is generally apparent. Oysters especially show marked advances as a result.

MONTREAL.

GREEN FRUITS. — Dealers report fair to good trade in general lines. Valencia oranges have been advanced $1, the trade now being asked, $4.50. New dates, second arrival, are quoted at 5c. Bananas are not so plentiful this week, but prices are reasonable. Anything from $1.00 to $1.75, according to quality, is asked. The first Nova Scotia cranberries of the season are now quoted, the price asked being $2.75 per 32 quart box. Lemons have been advanced 25c. New grapes are now becoming plentiful, and are quoted from $5 to $7 per keg.

VEGETABLES.—In vegetables there is not a great deal of activity at the moment. Trade transacted is more of a local nature than anything else, and merchants are buying only in quantities required for immediate use. The fact that all the staple lines are now finished means that the bulk of the trade is over. Imported vegetables are now almost completely taking the place of the domestic goods, and there is a consequent advancing tendency in prices. Green peppers are now costing $3 a basket, against $1.25 a week ago. Cucumbers are lower, good stock being obtainable at $1.25 per dozen, but even this price is high. Fair trade is being transacted in lettuce and tomatoes. California tomatoes are quoted at $3.25 a crate.

FISH.—There is an advancing tendency in the market this week, prices on several lines being higher. Stormy weather has had the effect of limiting arrivals of haddies, and stocks held are not large as a consequence. Shipments of bloaters and kippers are coming in freely, however. This will probably be the last week for fresh lake fish, as even now arrivals of dore and pike are falling off. Steak cod at 6c. is scarce on the market, but haddock and market cod are in very good supply. Stocks of Labrador herring are good, and there is excellent demand for these at prices quoted. Green cod is moving quite freely. Higher prices rule for shell oysters this week. $7 to $9 a barrel being asked. Standards are arriving more freely, but Selects are rather scarce.

VEGETABLES. — Hot house cucumbers are added to this week's list, and command a fancy price. All varieties of onions show an advance, as also cauliflower. Delaware potatoes are from 5 to 10 cents higher, owing to scarcity of cars for shipment; Ontarios remain at 75c. per bag, though very few are offered. In carload lots the two varieties are quoted at 75 cents and 65-70 cents respectively. Egg plant is no longer obtainable, and Canadian tomatoes are nearly exhausted. Peppers are also none too plentiful.

MALAGA PRICES.

Some idea of the havoc wrought in the Malaga raisin district of Spain by the great storm of September 26 may be gathered from a statement in a letter to Rose & Laflamme, Montreal, from Jose Segalerva: "The damage is so heavy that of 1,000,000 boxes we first anticipated—this being a regular crop—there will be left only from 350,000 to 400,000. . . . This district is where almost all the fine blue fruit is produced." Prior to this storm Malaga fruit prices were about on a par with last year. Since then they have been bounding upward.

White & Co., Toronto, received their first car of Mexican oranges this week. The fruit was particularly sweet and of good color for the first shipment.

NEEDED MORE ROOM.

Owing to their rapidly increasing trade in Canada, the Toronto branch of Holbrooks Limited, has had to seek more commodious quarters, and have removed to 25 Front Street, East.

SUGAR IS SUGAR.

Sigmund Stein, English sugar expert at the International Congress of Applied Chemistry at Rome, said: "One often distinguishes between different kinds of sugar, but in fact, the product is one and the same. Sugar is sugar, from whatever source or raw material it may be manufactured, but the public distinguish different kinds and varieties, and are led to this belief by announcements, which I am sorry to say are circulated for trade purposes, and which advertise the superiority of one type over the other. Canada, following the wise lead of the United States, is doing everything she can to encourage a home beet sugar industry."

Mr. Stein did not mean that sugar was not of varying quality. His object was, evidently, to correct the wrong impression that sugar from beet was essentually different from sugar, the product of cane.

A. Laniel, president of the Montreal Retail Grocers' Association, has returned from a short trip to New York.

NAPTHO SOAP CAMPAIGN.

The Welcome Soap Co., of St. John, N.B., have made a hit with their Naptho soap. The Maritime Provinces have been exploited with great success, both the trade and the public having taken to the new soap with great readiness. Repeat orders are coming most encouragingly. The company are now starting their campaign in Ontario, where their agent is David Grierson, 672 Yonge St., Toronto, and there is no reason why they should not be as successful west as east. Experts who have tested it say Naptho for all household purposes is one of the finest soaps in the world. The manufacturers say it is impossible to produce a better article at the price.

One's Wife as His Partner

The young man starting out on the more or less troublous, even if delightful, sea of married life, finds, among other questions to be taken up early and settled, the matter of family financiering. While some young couples arrange matters on a basis of allowances, others take up everything as equal partners, each entitled to know all the sources of family income and all the objects of family expenditures. In this matter Hugh S. Fullerton offers some pertinent suggestions. He says:

Trust your wife; make her your partner in business as well as in the household affairs. Lack of confidence, failure to confide in and consult with the wife is one of the most prolific sources of matrimonial clashes in the U.S.

The American, while acknowledging his wife as his equal, and declaring before the world that she is the most emancipated woman on the face of the earth, under pretext or under firm belief that he is sparing her worry, shuts her out from his business and strives to run the financial department of the household without consulting her. Many times this plan, which may be meant as the greatest kindness, is productive of grave troubles.

I know one man who promised to love, honor and cherish a woman who destroyed perhaps forever his own happiness and the happiness of his wife and child by a mistaken effort to spare her worry and anxiety.

This man was working on a salary of $60 a week, and of this he made his wife an allowance of $45 a week. On this sum she was supposed to pay all household expenses, dress herself and the baby and save enough each year to pay the taxes and the life insurance which he carried as a safeguard to his family. Her task she found an easy one. But after a year of this arrangement the firm declared a cut in expenses was necessary, and cut the salary of this man to $50 a week. There was no better opening visible and the man accepted the cut.

Instead of confiding in his wife and rearranging the family finances to conform with the new salary, the man determined to hide the facts from his wife, keep up her allowance of $45 and attempt to live on $5 a week himself, paying his lunch and car fare and cigar bills with $5. Things ran smoothly for a few weeks, but occasionally business demands caused the man to spend in excess of his $5 allowance. He ate at cheap restaurants or went without his lunches. His companions noted his change in habits—and so, in time, did his wife.

Believing that the man had $15 a week spending money, she wondered at his constant lack of money, and—in time a woman will—she became suspicious. She did not understand what he did with $15 a week, when his ordinary expenses would not run over half that amount. When she spoke to him about the matter he, realizing the sacrifices he had made supposedly for her sake, felt her implied censure keenly. The faith she had in him was shaken and the difficulty resulted in open rupture, which led to the divorce court.

His story of self-denial in court gave her the first intimation of the real status of the case, and she moved toward reconcilation, but he, with pride hurt, refused.

The man had nothing to blame but his failure to admit his wife to the partnership which the marriage vow contemplates. He meant well, undoubtedly, but he is one of those men who secure large paving contracts in the nether regions.

He sought to spare his wife worry regarding the decrease in his salary, and made her twice as much worry and infinitely more trouble.

The chances are that the woman who simply must have a $200 dinner gown for some function, or an $80 hat for Easter, would not ask for it if she thought she was forcing her husband to deny himself to give to her. The husband "hates to tell her he cannot afford it"—and through her ignorance she often bankrupts the family and then stands charged with the "extravagance," when her worst fault is ignorance, and that because of her husband's failure to trust her and to tell her exactly their condition of finances.

The proper method—and one which the ceremony of marriage means—is an equal partnership and an equal exchange of confidences in money matters as well as in other affairs.

If both know the exact condition of affairs and then ruin comes, neither can blame the other for the castrophe, and they remain as close together in ruin as in prosperity.

Henry Lafreniere, a large manufacturer of cigars in Ashland, Wis., intends to start a branch factory in Fort William.

WINDOW AND INTERIOR DISPLAY

Suggstion for a Moving Christmas Wi ndow Attraction—An Interior in Edmonton——Working the Show Window for all there is in it.

Michie & Co., Toronto, pay close attention to their window dressing, and change the trims once or twice a week. Monday of this week they took out a trim, the feature of which was figs, and put in another, the feature of which was still figs, but the whole was sufficiently different from that which preceded it to prevent it creating the impression of staleness in the mind of the passing public.

The back of the present window is a wall of honey in the comb, topped with small jars of strained. In front, to about half the height, are arranged various sized boxes of figs, square, oblong, large, small. Nuts have been added to this display. They are set among the fig boxes in circular papiere mache dishes 15 inches in diameter. In the centre of the window are Brazil, pecans, wallnuts, in a line one before the other. At either side of the pecans are filberts and almonds, making in all five kinds of nuts. The foreground is occupied with a few fancy boxes of figs and dates, some opened, and a couple of boxes of "crackers" are added on the centre line of the window for color.

Michie's never crowd their window.

The main portion of the window facing the street is separated by mirrors from the pane facing, anglewise, the doorway. In this small angular space on glass shelves is ranged a display of fine bottle goods and delicatessen.

It is not every good tea and coffee dealer, says the Tea and Coffee Trade Journal, that can put together an attractive window display. One may have a capital fund of useful knowledge in the purchase or even the sale of goods over the counter; a brainy, go-ahead dealer may go further than this and be an artist in fitting and arranging his store interior, and yet his talents may not reach out in the line of money-fetching window dressing.

But practically every dealer has a show window and every show window is an agency for advertising and the extension of sales, and, obviously, the extending of sales means in two directions increase in profits. First, you have more customers from whom you can get your income, and the larger demand makes larger purchases possible.

Therefore, so valuable a feature as your show window must be worked for all there is in it, and if you do not know the trick of squeezing out all there is in it, get some one who does, and—don't be niggardly—it will pay you to share liberally the extra income such extraneous talent may bring you.

There are legions of professional "window dressers" in these days of razor-keen competition, and they are looking for just such an opportunity of increasing your trade through your show window. They are doing that same trick so successfully for many thousands of other stores that the profession of rigging out a show-front that will bring cash returns is supporting a young army of artists who are window-sharps. If you don't know one, don't let that deter you; just put an ad in the papers and see them troop to your door.

AT AN OUTPOST OF COMMERCE.

Revillon Bros., are leaders in the tremendous commercial development of the Middle West. They are large operators in the fur trade. They have a wholesale department and a retail departmental store at Edmonton. The accompanying illustration shows their retail grocery department. It would do credit to a store in any part of Canada, and located at the doorway of the great northern plains, bespeaks the energy of western commercial methods.

DRY GOODS WINDOW DISPLAY COMPETITION.

Many readers of the Grocer are general merchants, and will be interested to know that the Dry Goods Review & Men's Furnisher is offering the following prizes, first prize $15, second prize $12, third prize $8, for the best window displays of Xmas goods in its respective lines, and further will pay $5 for every photo of a window display used sent in by competitors who did not earn a prize. The competition will close on February 1, 1907. All photographs, together with full description of window, must be addressed to,—Editor, "Dry Goods Review," Toronto.

The Slide.

MOVING DEVICE FOR CHRISTMAS WINDOW.

Good old Santa and his reindeer are familiar as the central objects in Christmas windows, and it is doubtful if any better one can be devised, or one that can begin to equal him in interest. But the decorator who has been steadily using Santa for this purpose, year after year, may be glad of a suggestion by way of a change. Perhaps not many grocers go in for mechanical contrivances to add to the attractiveness of their holiday windows, but here, is a simple one which some ingenuous good shift man might like to try. Call it a toboggan slide.

The diagram shows how simple it is. Two wheels, one higher than the other, connected by a belt to which are attached the brownies on their toboggans. It could be operated by a small motor.

The second illustration shows the staging. The housed background is merely suggestive. A piece of painted canvass with some trees, or simple winter scenery would answer. The mechanical contrivance would be placed behind the hill and adjusted to make it appear that the little fellows were coasting. The hill could be made out of batting, kalsomine and diamond dust. The belt which carries the tobaggoners might be covered with cotton to prevent it showing.

CARD WRITING.

It is not such a difficult matter to write show cards, but many grocers have never made the attempt which might show them that they were capable of producing a really respectable card by means of the pen or brush. Some merchants hardly use cards at all, others rely upon the rubber-stamp outfit. Clerks who might eventually develop great ability in the show-card line are hampered by the instruction of employers who cling to old ideas and fail to see the possibilities of new ones. Then there are the men who attempt the work without any apparent desire for excellence. Their crudity makes them an exhibit which attracts attention—and fails to attract custom. To the first class of card-writers we would say: Learn show-card writing, and to the second class we would say: Learn show-card writing.

By this is meant not necessarily the highest form of card-writing, which at the present day has come to be even a profession in itself, but the proper way to make a card, no matter how plain or simple it is. It is impossible in one lesson to teach show-card writing, but a few primary suggestions may be helpful.

One of the first causes of poor work is a failure to appreciate the value of simplicity. In almost every case the plain card is the best, and it is the first which should be studied. But so-called "fancy" lettering, and scrolls and furbelows have a facination for some people, and as produced by them they are an abomination to others. They cannot be read at a glance, sometimes, indeed they are next to indecipherable. Legibility is a prime requisite in a show-card; anything hindering it should be most carefully avoided. In the same class with "fancy" schemes may be placed old-fashioned styles of lettering,—not the genuine "old styles," which are among the best letters in use to-day, but the freak fashions which appeared in type, roughly speaking, between the years 1850 and 1890, and which even yet, in some localities, the unfortunate country editor is compelled to employ.

Taking it all round, country newspapers although a good thing to support, is a bad place in which to look for good type faces, but the large city dailies and the magazines which at some time or other reach the most out-of-the-way part of the country, contain models which every dealer having to do with window-cards would do well to study, choose from and copy. Of course in most cases a type printed letter must be modified to a certain extent when used for show-card work. It always pays to do the work well, but it doesn't pay and isn't necessary to spend the time on a temporary price-card that it would take to letter a permanent sign. Show-card writing and sign-writing are two different trades—or professions, for you can be an artist in either of them—and the very best cards are written by some of the fastest workmen.

PRICES ON PACKAGE GOODS.

Detroit Retail Grocers' Association, a strong organization including many of the most important retail concerns in the city, may commence a fight on the practice employed by several manufacturers of placing the retail price in their packages of goods. This practice is considered to be against the retailers' interests, hence the opposition to a continuation of it. A large number of widely advertised proprietary food products have the retail price printed prominently on the label. The retailers maintain that the profit which they are allowed to make is sometimes so slender as to amount to almost nothing.

The Staging.

J. Ernst & Son, general merchants, Mahone Bay, have purchased the property of Elias Langille at Blockhouse, N.S., which they will open as a branch. A. L. Ernst will have charge.

Don't Change

"Change just for change is just like these big hotels—
When they shift the plates and let you live on smells."

WOOD'S COFFEES

smell to a purpose. They give that fragrance that the coffee drinker likes, and after found will always hunt for.

In other words, after smelling, he doesn't want any change in his coffee.

Grocers who have made these Coffees their leader, do not desire a change, for their patrons will not permit it.
